Col. Maude Says In "ec" Policy is to Save the Kaiser's Throne
—Paving Way For Peace

Colonel S. N. Maude, C. B., whose knowledge of Germany is derived from many years of study and personal experience, writing in the London Sunday Times, refers to the growing belief in the theory that one of the great objects steadily maintained in the view of the directors of the German policy is to save the Hohenzollern dynasty and the system it heads from the revolution of national feeling, which will follow the recognition that the country has been led into a disastrous war.

Colonel Maude says the pinch of hunger is beginning to be keenly felt in Germany, not yet in the great cities, but where everyone who knew anything of German interior economy would have foreseen it must happen—i. e., on that part of the land away from the great landowners' estates.

Here the women know they have been deceived about the war, and they are beginning to get very restive, for the post office still delivers internal letters uncensored. Colonel Maude says:

"The potato riot at Schonberg was due to the gathering of distress and discontent which oppress the major part of the women. The million widows—and there are a good many more now—will take a vast amount of explaining away, and the fact that retired old policemen on whom fall the responsibility of maintaining order when the troops are at the front on the firing line, have no chance against the fury of hungry women, whose tongues will not be silenced."

"What everyone appears to overlook in the present case is the curious fact that now at last there is not sufficient authority remaining in Germany or Austria to support the day-to-day transactions and the customs in normal country life. All middle-aged and vigorous police have been drafted into the armies, and old men, who have taken their places are not anxious to lose the status ac-

A Nation Breaking Up

"This is the way in which almost invariably the international break-up of a nation is brought about. In this way, multiplied a thousand times, disaffection spreads like burning on a tidal river. Then comes the time when an extreme estate socialist lawyer recognizes that with an active army at the front and some two million of that already dead or hopelessly crippled, an election would mean a clear socialist triumph, with, moreover, exceedingly inconvenient consequences for the Hohenzollern dynasty."

"The only way in which it may still be possible to save the face of this particular sufferer is for the government to lead the people to believe that they have the whole world engaged against them—aged on, of course, by perfidious England, as usual. Therefore, sooner than allow his people to endure further annoyance in such an unequal struggle, the Kaiser, with divine compassion, will condescend to heal the woes of his people by taking from them rather less than he at first expected to get."

"There seems no other explanation for the fatuous imbecility allowed and encouraged in the German press except in this determination to bluff the people."

"To judge from its daily newspapers, everyone would imagine that Great Britain had declared food contraband of war and was really taking serious steps to bring a great conflict to a conclusion. According to Sir Edward Grey's note to the Washington government, we have not even yet interfered with German food imports at all, unless the destination of such imports to the military forces of the Germans was clearly evident."

"So far as hampering the import of foodstuffs from neutral countries, we have done nothing to warrant the German press outcry. In fact, the only vessels of war which are obstructing such trade, and thereby increasing the suffering of their own people, are their own submarines and drift mines, which appear somehow to bag five neutral to two British ships, although there are ten times as many of the latter to attack abroad on the seas."

"The extraordinary predominance of neutral destructions cannot be a result of chance. The probabilities mathematically are overwhelmingly against such a conclusion. The only inference to be drawn is that the Hohenzollern dynasty through some secret and trusted servants, is deliberately trying to produce a situation which will give the Kaiser an opportunity for the most dramatic coup of his life. If all the neutrals of the world were now to turn against him he could publish an act of surrender which would render his memory immortal with his people and it could contain at least half-a-dozen luncheon for sea-senine."

hostilities as soon as the nation had sufficiently recovered to be able to make an attempt. For the moment, I do not believe the allies will really enter into the imperial calculations except as an embarrassing distraction. His whole end and aim is apparently to keep in with the socialist votes by a press campaign against England and the allies for if the Socialists once feel their present power and begin to use it the last of the Hohenzollerns is now on the Prussian throne."
