A Kiss A Kiss A MISS!

Joseph M. Schenck
Constance Talmadge
 in "LESSONS IN LOVE"

A FIRST NATIONAL ATTRACTION

He needed those Lessons in Love, did the simple cowboy, who found he had to marry a freak or be cut off with the usual dime. But we'll say he had a good tutor—the world's prettiest housemaid. And he was a fast learner. But when Friend Cupid swung the lasso at last—well, you ought to see what was dragged in.

Who wouldn't take Lessons in Love from Connie Talmadge? She's the cutest housemaid that ever took a young man's hat and heart. And the story starts the laughs where all the others finished.

Adapted from Douglas Murray's comedy, "The Man From Toronto." Directed by Chet Withey

WALTER NIEBUHR PRESENTS
"HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER"

AN AMERICAN CINEMA SUPER-SPECIAL

Can one man compel another by the force of mental suggestion to murder a third man?

It is upon this question that N. Brewster Morse has constructed the high tension mystery drama, "His Brother's Keeper." The cast in whose hands the acting of this photograph has been entrusted has seldom been brought together in a single picture.

"His Brother's Keeper" is as perfect a picture as modern art can produce.

Usual small prices prevail during this extraordinary attraction.

ONE OF THOSE CUB REPORTER STORIES

(William B. Hershey in New York Evening Post)
 The recent death of Samuel J. Bennett, a well known newspaper man, recalls an adventure tradition says he had years ago, when Li Hung Chang, Chinese statesman, visited the city.

At the time Sam Bennett, as he was known among his associates here and abroad, was a new cub reporter on the Evening Sun. He was long on ideas but short on experience, when his city editor assigned him to interview Li Hung Chang at the Waldorf, it looked to him like a tough proposition.

It looked even more so upon his arrival at the hotel. He found reporters from other papers gathered in the grill room, awaiting some reply from Li Hung Chang's secretary to their requests for an interview. Among them were a number of old timers with big reputations. They grinned at the cub when he timidly asked one of them if he thought it would do any good to send up his card.

"Say, kid, forget it, kid," said the old hand. "Hang around a while, the bunch is going up to his room later, and when we come down I'll see that you get the stuff."

Sam hung around, but in another part of the hotel. He meandered out into the corridor and halted a bell-hop.

"Take this up to Li Hung Chang's room. There's a five-spot in it for you if you get in—and another five if the old bird will see me."

Then Sam settled down to wait. He didn't think he had one chance in a thousand. But presently the bellhop appeared with word that the noted visitor was ready to receive Mr. Bennett. Sam broke all records getting upstairs. Meanwhile the star reporters downstairs in the grill were holding down the brass rail.

Sam was most cordially and elaborately welcomed. Li Hung Chang's secretary acted as interpreter.

"What will the gentleman have me ask his excellency. He esteems it a great honor to be interviewed by Mr. Bennett."

Mr. Bennett felt his chest measure increasing.

What didn't Mr. Bennett want to ask Li Hung Chang? When the interview ended he had enough material for six columns, and he knew he had a wonderful story. The secretary led him into another room and gave him a number of presents—with the compliments of Li Hung Chang. His arms were so filled with boxes of tea and such things that he was barely able to get through the door.

Sam hurried to telephone the story to his office. He was in the telephone booth about an hour and when he came out he felt that he owned the earth. But there was one thing he meant to do before going back to the office—let wait for the afternoon edition of his paper to come up to the hotel. He wanted to see how "the boys" would take it.

He went back to the grill room. They

He had their feet on the rail. Nobody noticed him. They didn't even notice the bundles in his arm. Well, he didn't care—he had one alone—and he did, toasting "the gang" to his own secret glee.

At last, as he was about to leave the room, a dapper little Chinese entered. It was the secretary. The reporters made a rush for him. But to their astonishment he asked for Mr. Bennett. That dignitary came forward nonchalantly, and the secretary bowed low, saying: "There is just one thing more his excellency wish to say—he desires to thank Mr. Bennett of the New York Herald for interviewing him."

Said one old stager, among other things, as soon as he revived "They think that kid is James Gordon Bennett!"

"Well, I got the story," said the departing Sam. "If you fellows want the dope you'll find it all in our sheet when it comes uptown."

The Good Old Times.

The vanity of age is a curious thing. As we approach fifty most of us who have survived plagues, pestilence, and famine, wars, panics, and the other perils that flesh is heir to begin to hark back to the good old times when everything was different. Because things were different we foster the delusion that everything was better. We expect youngsters to listen with rapt attention to our reminiscences. I confess that I myself find it necessary to fight constantly a tendency to corner some hapless youngster and describe to him the old State House, or the union station as it used to be in the good old times before the tracks were elevated and the mortality list lowered. Or, in a mood of condensation, I speak of that glorious year when our town figured in the schedules of the National League.

Baseball, I intimate, reached perdition in that year of wonder. When I speak of Kelly and Clarkson and other giants of those days and their visit to our capital, or recall Jack Glasco's as the most efficient and captivating shortstop the diamond has ever known, he merely smiles sadly, and if you continue he may be driven to ask you what you think of Babe Ruth and some other luminaries of the degenerate present.

There have been great men since Agamemnon, and we needn't imagine that the youth of today are not aware of the fact. Sufficient unto the day are the heroes thereof—Harpur's Magazine.
