7 MILLBANK, LONDON, ENGLAND

Why Have "Millbanks"
Become So Popular?

Because every introduction leads to lasting friendship. It is a case of "love at first smoking."

One smoker offers "MILLBANKS" to a friend. The friend is delighted with these mild, fragrant Virginia Cigarettes and buys a package for himself. This is happening many times a day in every section of Canada.
The reason is easy to find.

ripe, mellow, sun-cured Virginia tobacco—coupled with the richness and satisfying qualities found only in the highest grade

The fact that the price is 15c for 10 is simply an additional reason for preferring "MILLBANKS." every part of the cave. To one to whom a bat is a repulsive and diabolical creature such an intimacy would be highly distasteful, but it is a most interesting experience. Such a meeting affords an opportunity for an intimate insight into the animal's home life. While the flight of the bat under normal circumstances is perfectly noiseless, in such chambers in which thousands of individuals are flying wildly about the noise of their wings sounds like a great wind storm.

In the caves are great piles of guano deposited by the bats. These deposits sometimes are fifteen or twenty feet thick and are valuable as fertilizer. It is used by natives on fields. In a good cave many tons may be taken out without exhausting the supply. There are species of bats, such as the fruit eating, which are not so useful to man. Some of the larger bats belong to this group.
They come out of their homes an hour before dark and fly about fruit trees, searching for ripe fruit. They eat a great variety of fruits, depending on the season and locality. They eat bananas, raspberries, sweetop, rope culberries, rose-apples and many other varieties.

If the fruit is small they cut it loose and fly away with it, but if it is large they cling to it and eat it on the tree.
Some of the smaller fruit eating bats are very highly developed for the purpose of living off fruits, and some have very long tongues; one such variety with a body not larger than two and a half or three inches has a tongue which may be protruded an inch and a half beyond the nose. A peculiar specimen is the so-called fish eating bat, which has been observed at dusk flying low over the water and swooping from the surface minute crustaceans and marine forms.

Enemies of bats are owls which catch fruit eating bats and the large snake boa of the West Indies. Bats are social in habit and not solitary, and they have peculiar social characteristics. In four different varieties of bats are found in a cave, each kind keeps to its own group and does not fraternize with others.
The same is true of sex. Clusters of males are in one group and clusters of females in another. Bats are nervous creatures, highly strung, and acute of

MONTREAL

A CITY OF TERMINALS.

What has been termed a "new city in San Francisco Bay" has been planned in detail to provide a marine terminal for future commerce, and the completeness with which the plans have been worked out shows the belief of the projectors that what now stands on paper will eventually be translated into docks, warehouses, tracks and all the miscellaneous equipment that nowadays facilitates the passage of merchandise between trains and steamships. The Pacific Port Terminal, as it is named by a writer in the Pacific Marine Review, would extend about two miles seaward from Berkeley, on the east shore of the harbor, and its piers would look directly out at the Pacific through the Golden Gate. Harbor works, warehouses, factory developments, and machinery have been provided for in a way that would require many years before the terminal could be finished, but the immensity of the scheme is easily visible in that part of it which would be first undertaken.
Here is specified "two long wharfrage faces of upward of two miles on each side of the first unit, with a distance of 3000 feet between them, flanked by 3000 feet of waterway on each side of the wharfrage face." When one tries to picture a marine terminal equipped with special facilities and places for handling every conceivable commodity from a package of tacks to a train load the finished project might fairly enow be called a "new city."
