EFFECT OF EUROPEAN WAR ON RAW FUR CONDITIONS

London and Leipzig Greatest Fur Centres in the World—A Review of the Condition of the Market as a Result of the Great Struggle Now in Progress.

"What will be the price of raw fur during the coming season and what effect will the European war have upon the prices of raw furs in Canada, is a question of vital interest to every trapper and fur dealer at the present time," said Mr. John Hallam, the Toronto fur dealer.

"The fur trade is in a situation this season that is different from anything that the world has ever known. London, England, and Leipzig, Germany, have been the greatest fur centres of the world, and when we consider that these countries are at war, and also that Russia, who is both a great producer, purchaser and user of furs, is also involved in the conflict, as well as France, the fashion centre of the world. Taking the European war in connection with the world wide financial disturbance, there is no precedent by which a business man can accurately judge of the results.

"In 1913, Canada exported dressed furs of the value of $15,306.00 and raw furs to the value of $5,150,833.00, making a grand total of furs exported from Canada during that year of $10,696,139.00, according to the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce of Canada, when you take into consideration also that during the nine months ending March 31, 1913, according to official reports compiled for "The Fur Trade Review" there was exported from the United States raw and dressed furs of the value of $14,834,427.00 and at a conservative estimate there was an additional $2,000,000.00 worth of furs exported during the following three months, it makes a grand total of raw and dressed furs exported from America during the year 1913 of the value of over $22,000,000.00 then when you stop to realize that the European market for a large majority of these furs has been closed, and that this vast sum represents only about 65 per cent. of the value of all the furs caught in the United States and Canada during that year, that furs of the value of several million dollars are stored in London and Leipzig today, these facts taken in connection with the unsettled financial conditions throughout the world, it will give you a faint idea of the fur situation as it is today.

"On the other hand, during the same period there was imported into Canada raw and manufactured furs to the value of $1,226,965.00 and during the same nine months before mentioned there was imported into the United States raw and dressed furs of the value of $17,901,569.00 and during the succeeding three months we can safely say that there was an additional $1,500,000.00 worth of raw and dressed furs imported into the United States. It makes a grand total for the year 1913 of over $30,500,000.00 worth of furs imported into the United States and Canada.

"The stock of imported furs in America today is rather low, and if the war continues for any great length of time, these stocks will be gradually absorbed in the regular course of the fur trade. Should the war replace them, so that manufacturers will be forced to feature and use a larger number of American caught furs.

"About eighty-five per cent. of certain kinds of furs caught in America have been yearly exported to Europe, so that we may look for a rather heavy decline in prices on these items, while some of the other varieties of furs which have been more largely absorbed by American manufacturers will more nearly hold their own. It is not merely a question of having the European market cut off during the coming season, for even if peace should be declared within the next few months, the countries would be impoverished financially, all trade channels be disorganized, and it would require several years before trade with the countries who are now at war would assume normal proportions. In the meantime large quantities of fur would be trapped throughout the United States and Canada and large stocks would undoubtedly be accumulated in the hands of the dealers, making it a great problem for the dealers to find a market where they will be able to dispose of their furs and obtain their money. In addition to this proposition it can readily be seen that if the war continues for several years, as some experts believe, that the market for the sale of these furs will be further curtailed, enormous stocks will be left in the hands of the dealers, and the situation become more and more complicated as time passes by.

"Many American furs have heretofore been shipped to Leipzig and Paris to be dressed and dyed and are then re-imported to the United States and Canada. Many of the dyes for use in America have been imported from Germany, and on furs of this class, should the war continue for any length of time, there is bound to be a shortage both of dyed furs and also of dyes. It is to be expected in America, therefore it would not be surprising if a larger percentage of furs would be manufactured and used in their natural state.

"We also have to consider the fact that furs are a semi-luxury, and when people are out of work and finances are unsettled, the sale of fur garments by the retailer is bound to be reduced, as the public will use their money to buy necessities rather than luxuries in time of financial depression."

KARAKULE SHEEP FROM CENTRAL ASIA
 Dr. C. C. Young expects to take several of these valuable animals to P. E. I.
 Dr. C. C. Young has just returned from the Northern border of Afghanistan, Central Asia, where he had been for the past five months in quest of Karakule sheep. The doctor has secured 15 unrelated Karakule rams and 6 unrelated Karakule ewes. This establishes the Karakule industry in America, as blood lines have been secured that will prevent inbreeding for at least twenty years. It will not be very long now before American people will be able to secure the famous Persian lamb and Astrakhan furs, which names are applied to grade Karakule lamb skins. (Karakule rams crossed with numerous long wool-coarse wool domestic breeds of Asia and Southern Russia.) The animals were carried on camels to the nearest railway station, which is New Bokhara in the Khanate of Bokhara, West Turkistan, and from there they were shipped on the Central Asiatic Railway via Samarkand, Tashkent, Orenburg of Irbau on the Baltic Sea. Not only did the doctor meet with great difficulties in getting the animals out of Bokhara, but the same was true of getting them out of European Russia, as both Russia and Bokhara prohibit the exportation of these animals. Only in consequence of the chaos resultant from the declaration of war was Dr. Young able to get the sheep on the Russian steamer Drinak, which was the last boat that left any Russian port for America. Two days after the boat had left, the Germans bombarded Liban and the doctor expected that the Drinak would be captured and that the precious animals, on which thousands of dollars had been expended, would find their way into the sausage pots of the hungry Tatars. The sheep are now in quarantine in Baltimore, the doctor having, prior to his departure, secured permission from the United States Quarantine officials to bring the sheep to the States. It is against the laws of Canada as well as the United States to import live stock from Asia, in view of the many dreadful diseases existing there, with but small import herds have been slaughtered by the Canadian authorities this summer, and why recently a herd which had been taken out of European Russia, was refused admission on Prince Edward Island. After the United States government have released his sheep, Dr. Young expects to be able to secure permission to bring them to the island.

TO BE RE-INVESTED.
 The Royal Exchange received a communication a few days ago from one of its patrons in England, an investor in fox stock, requesting that all the dividends accruing from the fox investments held by him be re-invested in fox stock. The general feeling on that side, said the correspondent, was such that he had no doubt that capital from the Old Country would be coming here; the English investor will be seeking investments in Canadian enterprises.
