Saturday's Bangor Commercial says that arrangements are completed for this week's big horse trot and show at Maplewood park, the first annual meet of the Eastern Horse Breeders' Association, an organization com-posed of horse breeders from Maine and the maritime provinces. The horse shows are to be held in the forenoon. All the various classes from a 12, hand pony to the four-in-hand will be shown and the greatest meet ever held in Maine will be the same breed-er's association. There will also be a regular breeders' auction sale, which will no doubt attract men from far and near. One thing shout this meet which is worth thinking of, says the Commercial, is that every cent which is spent including the liberal purse and prizes will remain right here in the state of Maine and the maritime provinces. There will not be a dull moment in the fiternoon of the three days' meet which is held Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week. Instead of the usual stage per-faces the different horses and colts which are to be on exhibition will be brought out, put intog their paces, and shown to the people in the grand stande. There will cross matched team which will be shown with a new harness and a new under the free days when the horse in the cruted comment of the horse am. "Dear Sirs-tour fully. 'I. darling?' 'Not now, but last Summer-at-Campo bello and-and, Sydney, they said you were fickle, and-'

Something escaped Sydney's lips that oundel very wicked.

'Oh, you mustn't say that!' she cried in a bocked tone. 'Well, I can't help it!' he said savagely.

'Those confounded old gossips make me so infernally mad!'

'Sydney!' 'Forgive me, darling. But I can't bear to have the poison your mind with their idle stories. Arline, can you not trust me? It is you whom I love, and you only. You have my whole heart; it is yours to have and to hold always. Never doubt me, dear.

I could not bear that. He folded both arms around her and kissed her with surpassing tenderness. With his eyes looking love into hers, she forgot what troubled her. The waves swept in with a soft swish, and he whispered low: In love, if love be love, if love be ours, Faith and unfaith can ne'er be equal powers Unfaith in aught is want of faith in all-

Arline's arms stole around his neck. 'I do be'ieve in you, Sydney,' she said, and she kissed him of her own accord.

He was going away that day to New York on business, he said; but soon to meet again, as Arline thought.

When the mail came in the afternoon sh was sitting alone on the piazza, and some one handed her a paper. As she opened the sheet her eyes fell upon the heading, 'Prom-inent Arrivals.' Half idly she glanced at it. Senator Rufus K. Locke and daughter are at the Brunswick,' she read. That was Sydney's hotel, and Janet Locke was there Had he known it that morning? Could he -could he possibly have gone to meet her?

'What have you done with your cavalier?' ueried Blanche Purviance.

'Mr. Ogden? Oh, he has gone to New York.'

"Tis quite a treat to find you alone. My dear, he monopolizes you entirely too much; it's a shame! And yet,' she added, 'if I were engaged I should exact just as much devotion. It must be charming to have a handsome fellow like Sydney Ogden so desperately in love with you.'

Arline smiled faintly. 'Do you think he is?' she said. 'Of course he is!' Any one can see that. My dear, I-I hope you did not hear what that disagreeable Mrs. Frew said this morn ing?' 'Yes, I heard,' said Arline; 'but of cours I knew it wasn't true, and it didn't make the slightest difference to me.' 'I didn't presume it would,' said Blanche

'I didn't presume it would,' said Blanche, 'only it was so ill-natured. How becoming that dress is to you! I suppose you will go to the hop to-night? 'I hardly think so. I have such a head-ache. I think I shall go up now and lie down.' 'Oh, that will never do!' cried Blanche, 'They will all say you are grieving for Sydney.'

'Well,' said Arline, with a sudden flash in her eyes, 'I'm enaged to him. I've a creign Lime Juic and keep cool.

as been broken off since then.'

'I an very sorry, Janet murmured, and then there was an awkward pause, which she broke by asking: 'Have you read Gladys, Miss Eyre?'

'No,' Arline answered, taking the book. 'Oh, you certainly must read it. I was so much interested in it; for the scene is laid at Campobello, and there is a great deal of good local color.'

Arline took the book, and as Miss Locke soon left her she began to read it at once. It was a pathetic little story of a sweet It was a pathetic little story of a sweet young girl whose lover, Sydney Grey, had deserted her, but had come back to his alle-giance when he found her rich and famous. Arline read on with deep interest; the story grew upon her, but she could not finish it. Campobello, Sydney, a pretty girl—the as-sociation of ideas was unavoidable. 'Mrs. Frew,' she said, leaning over to speak to that lady, 'have y u read Gladys' 'Yes, indeed!' was the ready response. 'Int's it splendid! I was telling Mrs. Pur-viance about it the other evening.' 'When you were up on the piazza?' Arline gasped.

"When you were up on the piazza? Arine gasped. "Yes," was the smiling reply. 'It is all about Campobello, you know, and we were very much interested.' Arline rose abruptly, and walked into the house. It was only a novel they had been discussing then—oh, what had she thought and done! 'fell Miss Locke I would like to see her alone in my room' she said house ly.

'fell Miss Locke I would like to see her alone in my room,' she said hoarsely. She was walking excitedly up and down the room wh n Miss Locke came. 'Forgive me,' she said, 'but tell me truly, were you ever engaged to Sidney Ogden?' 'Don't put me off!' eried Arline. 'Tell me the truth. My happiness depends upon it'

it.' 'Why, of course not!' said Janet, laugh-ing. 'Syd is kind of a relation of mine-oh, I know what you mean! Last Summer, at Campobello--'

I know what you mean! Last Summer, at Campobello...' 'Yes!' Arline cried eagerly. 'That was all prearranged. Horace and I had quarreled, and I asked Syd to devote himself to me just to make Horace jealous; but of course you knew? 'No, I didn't!' cried Arline, bursting into tears. 'I wish I had known!' Then she sobbed out the story of her jealous folly.

inen ane sonded out the story of her jeal-us folly. 'You foolish girl,' cried Janet, 'you must sit right down and write to him. Don't spare yourself. Sydney fairly worships you.' 'I forgive you, Arline,' he wrote, but I can never have for my wife a woman who did not love me well enough to trust me.'

When a year had passed, Arline was sgain
