Japan's Grand Old Man-Eminent As Statesman, Diplomat and Soldier -Story of His Career Is Essentially That of Japan's Awakening and Moderniza tion-Largely Due to Mis Resourceful ness That Japan Whipped China.

In the event of a clash at arms between Russia and Japan over the Manchurian question the latter will be fortunate in having at command the services of so eminent a soldier, diplomatist and statesman as the Marquis Ito, who may fairly be counted as one of the world's few really great men. It may be trite, but not untrue, to call him Japan's Grand Old Man, as he bears to his country similar relations as those of Gladstone to England, Bismarck to Germany and Li Hung Chang to China. China.

The story of Ito's career is essentially the story of Japan's awakening and modernization. Born in the Province of Choshu in 1840 of noble parentage, educated mainly abroad, where he became imbued with progressive ideas, he came into the political arena just when his country needed a strong and able man to drive deep the wedge which Perry had entered into Japanese exclusive-ness in 1852, and he has since been closely identified with the marvelous progress of Japan in occidental civilization. He is the author of the present constitution of the kingdom, under which Japan is one of the most liberal of constitutional mon-most liberal of constitutional monarchies. Ever since he entered public life Marquis Ito has held one or another of the Ministerial portfolios of the Government, being Prime Minister a greater part of the time. He was Minister of War during the hostilities against China, and it was largely due to his saggeity and largely due to his sagacity and sourcefulness that Japan was able to whip the Chinese Empire in short order.

He is now seventy-three years of age and for some years has been almost blind and has had to depend upon his daughter in his literary work. "Pardon me," responded the young hopeful. "In your opinion I may merit corporal punishment, but I certainly do not want it. I really wish you would be a little more careful of your language."

"I was bothered for over a year with Lame Back, Weak Back, Palpitation of the Heart and General Weakness," says Mr. Landry. "In fact I was a total wreck. I could not work as I got tired and weak so easily and I had a weakness in my stomach so that I could not bend down to do anything.

"I had tried different kinds of medicine without benefit till I gave Dodd's Kidney Pills a trial. From the first they did me good and i had only taken three boxes when I was able to start work again. They did me good and no mistake."

THE LEONINE DUMAS.

Now His Worshipers Adored Their Literary Idol. One evening in the beginning of June I was taken to the residence of Dumas, on the Boulevard Malesherbes, by an intimate friend of the great novelist. As one thinks of a lion, with his shag-gy mane full of the jungle burs of ady mane full of the jungle purs of adventure, so I can see the author of "Monte-Christo" as he appeared on that memorable evening. Standing about were women friends, actresses, writers, poets, attracted by a world of romance symbolized in the figure scated in the middle of the salon. I was instantly impressed with two things—the frescess on the walls and the attitude of coes on the walls and the attitude of the host. He sat like a silent oracle, surrounded by a crowd of female admirers, the whole company set off by panels representing life sized figures from Goethe's great drama—Faust, Mephistopheles, Marguerite. There were no other pictures in the room. The in-fluence of these figures, the attitude of Dumas and his worshipers, concentrated the mind on the quintessential element of romance. Half indifferent he sat, as some handsome young woman would stroke his head, while another would place her hand on his shoulder, as they might have done with an old lion long tamed and without teeth. There was nothing to distract the mind from the harmony of idea and person ality-the company of women might have been part of the frescoes and Dumas the creator of "Faust" instead of "Monte-Christo." There was an en-chanted element about the people and

The whole company conversed among themselves, standing as if they were at court, while the host sat still and mused. I was held by the mystery, the fascination of the romantic atmosphere, the peculiar spell of the huge mass that filled the fauteuil like an idol of adamant. For there was something of the idol about the man. I thought of a Buddhist statue in a sitting posture, corpulent at the base, crisp at the top. The lower part of the face was of porcine dimensions, the skin swarthy, the hair curly, the expression of the eyes calm and sphinx-like. He was a man who not only had invented life, but had seen it.-Critic.

DEER LACK STAMINA.

The Wild and Fleet Footed Animals
Are Soon Fagged Out.

"It seems to be the opinion of a great many people that deer and antelope are at the top notch among animals as far as speed is concerned," said a Dakota ranchman. "I have often heard the expressions 'as swift as an antelope' and 'he can run like a deer,' but the fact is any good horse can run over Mr. Deer or Mr. Antelope within a mile on level or nearly level ground.

"I will guarantee to take any first class cow pony and run down any deer that ever lived inside of two miles, provided the ground be level and the deer has no more than twenty-five or thirty yards start. I often have seen cow-boys run down and rope a deer within half a mile. This, of course, can only be done when you are riding up the wind and surprise a bunch of deer or antelope feeding or lying down in a depression where they do not see or scent you till you are almost on them. Over a rough or hilly country your horse wouldn't be in it with a deer.

"The action of a deer under full speed reminds me of nothing so much as a seashell sent ricochetting over the surface of smooth water. They don't gallop; they simply bound, and that is where they lose speed over level ground. But I have seen deer bound straight up the side of a mountain and go fully as fast as if on the level, and no living animal can catch them at the uphill game. "Deer have tremendous vitality. have never seen one drop instantly when shot. They will make a jump or two even when shot through the heart.

"Your true deer hunter will never shoot a deer running from him, as the bullet will invariably spoil the hams and hind quarters. Most of the western deer hunters can turn a deer when he is running full speed from him with a shrill whistle. The deer almost always will turn to see what that sound means, only for a fraction of a second perhaps, but that is the hunter's oppor-tunity, and Mr. Deer generally gets it in the neck about that time.'

Effect of Music on Animals. At the zoo the zebra, wild ass, deer and ostrich went into paroxysms of rage at the sound of the piccolo, although they had manifested various signs of pleasure over the violin and flute. The tiger was asleep and re-fused to be awakened by the fiddler and flutist. But when the man with and nutset. But when the han with the piccolo began to play the animal sprang furiously to its feet and rushed angrily up and down the cage, lashing its tail. Se extreme was the beast's anguish that the piccolo man speedily angush that the piccolo man speeding gave place to the flutist. The differ-ence in effect was at once apparent. The tiger stopped, listened, lay down and purred like a kitten in its enjoyment of the grateful sounds, and presently fell asleep in luxurious repose.— London Spectator.
