"We have obtained better results from the Monetary Times than from any other medium our house has used. More direct inquiries resulting in actual business have been traceable to the Monetary Times than to any of our other advertising."

The above is an unsolicited compliment to the Monetary Times from an experienced advertiser. He doesn't desire his name to be published in connection with the above, but he informed the Monetary Times that "if anyone wants to know you can tell them, but don't publish my name with this unnecessarily."

We have dozens of this kind of letters. If YOU advertise, you'll write the same in a year, or, at least, you'll think it even if you don't write it.
