The modern girl takes up a variety of abstruse studies, or severes herself to athlette exercises of a severe kind. Would it not be more to the point if she would take lessons in sympathizing? No more terribly neglected branch of social study exists. So rare is the sympathetic person, that when we do find her—it is usually a 'her'—we rejoice in her more than in hidden treasure, and her fame as a healer of wounds goes abroad until she finds herself beset with more confidences than mortal mind can safely hold.

The ability to feel for an afflicted friend is not at all rare; most of us are fairly running over with that; but what we need is the moral strength to abstain from remarking. 'It told you so," or making that most imbeelle of expressions: 'Don't worry.' How can roasonable people help worrying when there is cause for it? It is human nature. We shouldn't ery over split milk, if it could be gathered up. Neither does it bring relief to an aching heart to be told how much worse it might have Beef, or how much worse off other folks are.

""" are only children of a larger growth, after all. When baby comes willing to us with a bumped head or cut for yet don't describe to him the more acute suffering of the little boy in the honoital, or complain in judicialwise that had he bear areful his wee noddle and the wall would never have come into undesirable contact. A mother worthy of the name takes the little sufferer on her lap and kisses the afflicted member, and says she is "so sorry," until he is comforted. Grown-up suffers also want to be cried over, not moralized not told to cheer up when there is nothing to be cheerful about. The only way to really console a stricken soul is to give it what it cries for, and since we can seldom do that, the truest sympathy chows itself, not in preaching, or hollow words of cheer, but in the slient hand clasp, or the voice which says, through its tears: "I, too, am sorry!" —House wife.

According to Commissioner Wright's latest report. 15 states of the Union are supporting institutions for the care and instruction of feeble minded persons of all ages. The outlay for grounds and buildings for their use is $4,040,000. The annual expenditure for their support is $1,362,000. As caretakers and teachers 823 persons are employed, and the number of pupils or immates is 8,177 of whom about 55 per cent are men.

It is not quite safe to assume that all the feeble minded persons in our cities the feeble minded persons in our cities and towns are gathered into public in stitutions. Years ago, when a similar establishment was proposed in Amsterdam, the objection was raised that it would be a difficult and delicate question to determine who was eligible to admission, but a waggish Dutchman suggested that "by roofing the whole city they would be sure to cover them all."

"Senator Elect Porter J McCum-ber," says a North Dakota man. "is a hustler, for he struck Dakota in 1889 without a dollar to his name, but chock full of law and determination. He had an office in a shack that hadn t more than $10 worth of lumber in t all told. McCamber, however, buckled down to work in that shanty and gave the fellows with $5 cases just as good and just as much law as the $50 fellows, and it didn't takke long for his reputation as a worker to spread from Wahpeton all over the state. He was just the sort of man the Dakotans wanted, for he worked for them day and night just as hard as he worked later when he was after the 'blind pig proprietors.

Against Those

Who Treated Childhood Inh Dickens and Froebel and Their Work for Children

Work for Children

Froebel and Dickens, it is claimed, are the best interpreters of Christ's ideals of childhood. The philosophy of Froebel and the stories of Dickens are in perfect harmony. The two great reformers protested vigorously against the interference of intermeddling adults with the full development of the individuality of the child. They recognized the divinity in each child so fully that they objected to all "stamping and molding" processes by which its self-hood was dwarfed or warped. Other educators and reformers had considered the problems of human evolution from the standpoint of the adult and had asked, "What can we do to fit the child for its work?" Froebel and Dickens asked, "How can we help the child to grow by its own self activity?" They were the great apostles of childhood. They began the struggle for the freedom of childhood from the restrictive interference of adulthood.

Dickens is commonly regarded merely as an educational critic. This is a narrow and unfair view. He was a great critic. He aroused the indignation of the civilized world against those who treated childhood inhumanly, and the hatred of adult tyranny which he awakened developed a loving sympathy for children. But he could not have so clearly exposed the wrong in education without having a definite conception of the right. He was the greatest destructive educational critic, but he was also a most advanced, positive, constructive a most advanced, positive, constructive educator There is no great ideal of the "new education" which is not revealed by Dickens in his novels or his miscel-

Dickens was the first Englishman of Dickens was the first Englishman of note to advocate the kindergagen. In a country where live, stock plays so important a part in farm work as it does in Canada there is scope for a series of experiments along the lines of breeding, growing and feeding of live stock that should prove of great value to farmers. This will, we understand, be the chief part of Mr. Grisdale's work, as he will have charge of the live stock upon the Central Farm at Ottawa, and all the branch stations as well. Mr. Grisdale is a capital judge of live stock. It will be remembered that at the Omaba Exhibition he carried off first prize in the intercollegiate judging contest. Rough Hark on this Trees.

The gradual shickening of bark on trees is often objected to as an evidence of unthriftiness. But it almost always comes on trees when they get to be of bearing age, and except for harboring the cocoons of the codelling moth it does no harm. Soraping this bark off through the winter removes the protection and the cocoon stypesd to snow and rain periables. These cuck one will be usually found en the side opposite where the prevailing wind blows, as this is partly protected against the beating rains, especially if the tree trunk leans that way. Only the bark that readily comes off should be removed. Scraping the trunk down to the green bark will cause some kinds of trees to sun scald and is injurious. Make the tree grow vigorously and the rough bark will roil off of itself or with very little effort.
