THE COURIER.

But a few years since it was the opinion of many sincers and enlightened, men, that the Cours should possess the power of nominating the Legislative Council, or intermediate estate of the Legislative; and that to conduct the administration of the Government so as to ensure the confidence of the people, the Executive Council should be composed of individuals selected from various parts of the country, with the view of imparting to the head of the Executive a knowledge of the people's wishes and wants. The re-construction of the Legislative Council, and the additions subsequently made to it, have thoroughly disabused the public mind, and trained them to regard it with indifference, if not contempt; and, heally, when it failed to sindicate a high constitutional principle, and descended from its legititutional principle, and descended from its legit netions to yield a slavish obedience to a Ministerial junto, the voice of an outraged people demanded a fundamental change in its constitution—that change is the adoption of the Elective principle. The few years, during which Responsible Government has existed, have been almost sufficient to reduce the Colony to a state of year summent to reduce the cotony to a state of the salage, and render the population, one and sill by cunningly deviced lurks of dependent interest acessery to their own degradation, to the prostra on of all that is respected in the human charac fer, and to the elevation of whatever is base in principle and in conduct. No argument in favor of an Elective Legislative Council has yet been presented so conclusive as the blank mandamuses of Lord Elgin. If the people sometimes err in their choice of servants, the blunder is almost alwayaghe result of a generous but blind and un-suspicious confidence. When the Executive in-troduces acknowledged ignorance and imbecility to the public councils, the deviation is invariably the result of design. If the Council were made Elective, the evils of an injudicious choice would be short-lived. The right of election returning to the people at stated intervals, intelligence and patriotism, ignorance and venality, would find consults its own objects, at the expense of the public security, will have little regard in the exder men deservedly popular.

It would appear that the Auti-Renters are less fluctant than they formerly were to enter into on with the landlords; the some accommod VanRansellars, Livingstons, and others. The old seen sounded in their ears by the State, and they have taken the alarm. It is quite evident that, if the lands do not belong to the VanRansellars and other landlords, they must belong to the State; hence the query-Would the State sell upon as moderate terms as the long-resisted landlords i The tenure by which the property is held in the Dutch grants has many features in common with our fendal tenure, and we are not surprised that the restless and enterprising race who now occupy those lands should feel the hampering restrictions thensome. The English Minister at Washington, Sir Henry Lytton Bulwer, delivered a speech before the Historical Society of Maryland, which is well the Historical Society of Maryland, which is well calculated to captivate the fancy of the Ameri-cans, though, in rising to the height of fever head in the atmosphere of popular prajudice, he may, by yielding to the seductions of a fervid imagination, have sacrificed the fidelity of the historian read other men's minds and mask his own the motives which lured him from the seclusion of It was decorous and becoming on the part England's representative to make honorable men-tion of the stout-hearted old man who fills the Presidential Chair; but when he institutes a Presidential Chair; but when he institutes a studied, long-drawn comparison between Buena Vista and Agincourt—between honest Zachany Taylor and King Henry—we are reminded of that significant phrase of Western growth called "Bunkum." We are willing to award our neighbors unstituted praise when the men or the country slates it. We admit the calm courage and events claim it. We sainit the calm courage and military skill of General Taylor, qualities which he shares in common with a long list of promiment American leaders; but we enteen the un-tried valor of the Saxon race on this Continent above the coldly contested field of Buena Vista— the supple and effeminate Mexicans, deteriorated by the softening influences of a Southern climate, by the softening influences of a Southern climate, are not the antagonists by whose resistance we can measure the vigor of the North. The battle of Baena Vista cannot bear comparison with the combat of Craon, either with respect to the generals, the soldiers, or the carnage that ensued. Yet to how few of those who laud the Mexican victorian with the combat of the reliable of the combat of the reliable of the re tory to the skies is the name of "Craon" familiar, and what European writer would cite the bloody battle of "Craon," with its sixty thousand combalants, and twenty thousand killed, as a national triumph at once decisive and conclusive. If we condemn the military comparisons which Sir H.

L. Bulwer institutes, we admire the scholar-like taste with which he points the compliment to Webster and Clay, the lights of the political horizon—the classic allusions to Ulysses, Nestor, and Achilles fall gracefully from his lips, and the ercise of its choice to those qualities which renideality of the past is happily applied when sketching the characteristics of the American

We make one extract from the speech in question, for it gives expression to opinions in which the majority of this population concur. Our condition as Colonists, even when nursed in the lan of protection, and pampered with Imperial gold, implied an alliance in time of war which involved us in the calamities incident to the military occupation of our soil-maritime rivalry fomented angry feelings, and Canada was invariably the selected battle field. The Annexationists seeks a political existence which would preserve the country from a repetition of the calamity, and Sir H. L. Bulwer confirms the value of the exemption. His style is more forcible than elegant. law of language," he says, " is the law of God, and those who speak the same tongue are not innded irksome and but- tended by Providence to cut each others throats." duty would fail to convince a Military Court deciding upon the sentence of a contumacion

[Translated from "L'Avenur" of 27th April.]

A subscriber to the Avenir lately presented himself at the holy confessional, to fulfil one of the commandments of the Church. It was in a Farish that one hundred miles from Moutreal, nor very far from a Sault.

The Vicar of the Parish, from whom our subscriber saked absolution, replied to him that he could not give it, because he took the Avenir.

Bul," said the Penitent, "you forget that you borrow that paper regularly from me, to read it?"

"My dear child," said the Vicar, "it is not the reading it which is evil, it is subscribing to it, and paying for it: that is the crime." "Oh—he! I understand," cried the Penitent, "we shall not come to terms to-day!"

The above anecdote is authentic, and we shall furnish, if required, the names of the Penitent, the Vicar, and the Parish. The recital of it is painful to us, disgraceful to our adversaries, and humiliating to the country which is the scene of such scandalous apertacles.

Abraham quoted esperal passages, some of them as old as the reign of Edward I., which went to show, from the Statutes relating to "Churchwardens," that it was customary and legal for Churchwardens in the earlier reigns to levy taxes upon persons holding a mart or stall for wares within the precincts of Church property or existe in land. Now that this right was inherent in the office under question during the reigns when ecclesistical power was fairly established, and extended to eages appertanting solely at the present date to civil authority, was one thing, but to prove irrefragably that a Churchwarden could exercise the same power in the same number of cases in the Reign of Edward I. as in the Reign of Queen Victoria was quite different. Nevertheless, the line of distinction between the sucient and modern office has to be clearly ascertained in cases like this, otherwise no Jury could oome to a decision. The indictment stated that the tax in question, amounting only to 12s. 3d. was levie d on groom occupied by the complainant lying mar and contiguous to the Couvent b longing to the Nuss of the Parish of St. Martin. If that property belonged to the Church, of which Mr. Papinesu was Churchwarden, then, since the law of the land, now in force, authorized the Church, of which Mr. Papinesu had exercised no feigned right. If, upon the contrary, it could be made apparent that the place, specified in the indictment was not the property of the Church, of which Defendant was the officer, then he had laid himself open, without doubt, to a charge of extertion. In either of these two cases, nevertheless, no Jury could come to say vardiet upon the indictment. This, the learnied gentleman remarked, could easily, and beyond a doubt, he made apparent. This indictment, for unstance, accused Andre Bergiamht Papinesu of extertion, because he had levied 12s. 3d, upon a vender of small the same tongue are not into cut such others throats."

In glish Minister's theory of province a Military Court.

The indeterment, for and the same tongue are not into cut such others throats."

The indeterment, for instance, accused Andre Benjamin Papinesu of extortion, because he had levied 13s, 3d, upon a vender of small because upon ground contiguous to the Convent of the Naus in the Parish of St. Martin, It was necessary that every indictment should counsin a cnarge unit ouemon, the law. Now the words of the indictment, and of the part of it which contained the charge, was, that he, Mr. Papineau, the party accused, had levied the tax of tak. Ed. spon ground lying contiguous to the Church of the Parish of St. Marill. The indictment did not say on ground had beliefflur to the Church t 't'it did, there would be an ish of St. Martin. The indictment did not say on ground not belonging to the Charch; if it did, there would be an offence specified which was against the law. But the indictment only said on ground contiguous to the Charch, without mentioning what was the point that made the offence against law; namely, that the place where the tax was levied was upon ground not belonging to the Charch. As the indictment countried no charge that offended the law, he; Mr. Abruhum, would move, that the said indictment be quashed. After a learned and length.

On Friday, the 500x a trial ottoe on m. Quarter, Sections, which and excited susch public interest. It is well known that party feeling runs high in the Farish of St. Martin, and four indicaments were found and sent up for virial in Ontober Inter-two against A. B. Faginess. Expensed two against Farry Courter, East, Noticy, for extentioning the sum of thirteen shiftings and mergence in each case. Mr. Loranger appeared for the presention, and Mr. Labannes and Mr. Appellem for the extendents. The jury Labannes and Mr. Appellem to the extendents.
