Whose Say-so is Best?

With nearly all medicines put up for sale through druggists, one has to take the maker's say-so alone as to their curative value. Of course, such testimony is not that of a disinterested party and accordingly is not to be given the same credit as if written from disinterested motives. Dr. Pierce's medicines, however, firm a single and therefore striking exception to this rule. Their claims to the colidence of invalids does not rest solely upon their makers' say-so or praise. Their ingredients are matters of public knowledge, being printed on each separate bottle wrapper. Thus invalid confidence. Scores of leading medical men have written emough to fill volumes in praise of the curative value of the several ingredients entering into these well-knewn medicines.

by Wife's Coffin.

Boston, Aug. 29.—The death of his wife has changed Thomas W. Lawson from a "financial whirlwind" into a grief-stricken recluse, who may never again emerge to mingle in the affairs of his fellow-men. He does not even attempt to supervise his most pressing personal affairs.

For twenty days and nights he has sat near the casket of Mrs. Lawson, which, contrary to the orders of the authorities, still rests in the little cottage at Dreamwold. He had a couch placed beside the coffin. There he keeps his ceaseless vigil, leaving only long enough to enter the garden and pick his dead wife's favorite flowers, which he heaps above her body.

Mrs. Lawson's body could be laid in the vault prepared for it, but the physicians fear that if the casket were taken away the husband's mind would give away completely.
