

The Queen of Hearts. The winsome lady who holds it in her modest school-room, her courtiers seldom forgetting that they are little ladies and gentlemen, does this only because she has their hearts; and their hearts she can have only as she can control their thoughts; and their thoughts she controls only through her own fine personality, and constantly putting into their receptive minds suggestions pleasing and wholesome.

Next meeting in Temperance Hall, Thursday, March 24, at 3.30 P. M. The meetings are always open to any who wish to become members. Visiting members of other W. C. T. Unions are cordially welcomed.

Miss Willard Dead. New York, Feb. 17.—Condition of Miss Frances Willard who is seriously ill in this city, with grippe, to-day reported as less favorable than yesterday.

New York, Feb. 17.—At a late hour to-night Miss Frances Willard was in a precarious condition. Miss Gordon, her private secretary, said that Miss Willard's condition was more serious than at any time since her illness, and the worst was feared.

False Representations. An Ontario Lady Compels a Merchant to Pay for Damages. A lady writing from an Ontario town says: "A month ago I visited one of our town stores and asked for three packages of Diamond Dye Navy Blue for dyeing all wool goods."

Smooth Roads and Traffic. The increase of efficiency in vehicles having a smooth surface on which to travel is very great. Perfect rails are a necessity for the engine, and smooth roadbed is essential if high speed is to be obtained.

A Magazine Which Builds Houses. The readers of The Ladies Home Journal are about as responsive a clientele as any magazine possesses. About six months ago the Philadelphia magazine started to publish a series of practical architectural plans showing how artistic houses could be built at moderate cost.

William Dean Howells' father, who emigrated to Ohio half a century and more ago, used this formula to get rid of an intrusive visitor who had worn out his welcome. He would be called out on some business, and would say to the guest:

"I suppose you will not be here when I return, so I wish you good-bye. This was not an ordinary case, however, with the superb stratagem ascribed to Gerrit Smith in such emergencies—as that he used to say in his family prayer after breakfast:

Mrs. Fudge (with a flourish)—How is your grandfather this morning, Bridget? Bridget—He still has the rheumatism, my dear. "You mean he thinks he has the rheumatism." "There is no such thing as rheumatism."

A few days later: "And does your grandfather still persist in his delusion that he has the rheumatism?" "No, mum; the poor man thinks now that he is dead. We buried him yesterday."

When a man says he is a moderate drinker it is about as definite as saying anything is the size of a dog.

Scraps for Odd Moments

Ho—I begin to think— She—Better late than never. In business three things are necessary, knowledge, temperance and time.

Minards Liniment is the best. Ham—Didn't Banis marry one of the Swain bell ringers? Fat—No. He married an Irish clothes wringer.

There are few younger complimenters that can be paid to a young woman than that which accords to her the character of an excellent housekeeper.

Employer—I see you have a glass eye, Fat. Yes, yer 'anser; but it's a widdle, sir. I can see nothin' out of it.

The latest thing is the old fashioned cross stick in wool, with the high lights in silk, such as our grandmothers used to work. A cushion duns in this material will last a generation.

Her Father—So you wish to marry my daughter, you say? The diplomat—Yes; but a dearer wish of mine is to comfort your own declining years.

Huband (on his return from business)—Why, my dear, what is the matter? You look ill. The doctor—Oh, John, I've just been reading a patent medicine advertisement, and I find I have twenty-one diseases any one of which may prove fatal.

Father Muldoon—What if I'm hearing, Clancy, about your having broken Regan's head last night, and the two of you boom friends for years. Clancy—Oh was compelled to do it, your reverence; but can't you remember that same friendship of mine I broke it gently?

The captain of a trading vessel having come contraband goods on board, which he wished to land, said to an exciseman, whom he knew, "If I was to put a half-crown piece upon each of your eyes, could you see the answer was yes, and if I had another upon my mouth, I could not speak."

Two Irishmen, one crossing a field, came in contact with a donkey which was making "day hifens" with its unceasingly braying Jimmy stood a moment in astonishment, but, turning to Pat, who stood as much enraptured with the song as himself, remarked: "It's a fine thing that bird has for music, Pat, but sure he's got an awful cowl."

Even if people go to church, there is the difficulty of keeping their seats. One clergyman, sorely tried by a dining majority of his audience, stopped speaking, when they all, naturally, awoke. Then he said to them: "My good friends, this sermon cost me a good deal of labor, and I do not think you have paid it the attention it deserves. I shall, therefore, go over it again." And he did.

Minards Liniment the best Hair Restorer. A train was carrying, in a compartment of the third class, a clergyman and five or six young ragamuffins, among whom, to annoy the minister, kept scolding at religion, and telling a disagreeable story. The good man endured it all hearing without moving, and at his journey's end he got out, and only remarked—"Well, shall I say, my children, 'Why shall we meet again?' asked the leader of the band. 'Because I am the prison chaplain,' was the reply.

What is the proper reply to the everyday remark, "I beg your pardon"? There seems to be a large number of replies, varying according to the class or status of the replier. A correspondent has kindly ascertained and catalogued them as follows:

The very polite: "My fault, I'm sure." The polite: "Don't mention it." The average: "All right." The gentle: "No harm done, sir." The gentleman: "I beg your pardon." "Why don't you look out?" The lowest: "What yer shavin'?"

Dear Sir,—I have been a great sufferer from rheumatism, and lately have been confined to my bed. Being your MINARDS LINIMENT advertised in your issue of the 25th inst., I tried it and got immediate relief. I ascribe my restoration to health to the wonderful power of your medicine. Yours truly, Lewis S. Butler.
