While the announcement from Ottawa indicates that their Royal Highnesses, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught will leave Canada only for a short time, there is a general feeling that they will not come back, but will remain in England, and a new Governor General will be appointed. There is considerable speculation as to the Duke of Connaught's successor. Many people believe that another member of the Royal Family will be sent out, while others insist that the duty of presiding at Government House will be assigned to a titled member of the British aristocracy below the rank of Prince. The latest name to be used in connection with the appointment is that of Earl Beauchamp, who was formerly Governor of New South Wales.
