THE HURON SIGNAL PRIDAY, LETTER 136

The Poet's Corner.

The Crazy Quilt.

I received at the end of my journey, A welcome that made my heart ache, And into the pleasant guest-chamber Was, ushered at bed-time to sleep. The room was delightfully coay,
The furniture chosen with cure,
While spread o'er the bed so inviting.

Was something I'd not seen elsewhere It was fashioned of silks, velvet, satin. Of every conceivable hue, Embroidered with birds, beasts and flowers In a manner most wonderous to view. But my limbs were so weary with travel, And so heavy with slumber my eyes,

That I thought, "I'll wait until morning.

And puzzle it out when I rise." To dreamland I soon must have journeyed. When a floating procession of garments Advanced by invisible means.

They came from the southward in clusters, They came from the northward in troops While east and west seemed to rival All others in size of their groups. There were ball-dresses, long past their splen dor; White robes which some bride must have worn; Queer ribbons, old bonnets and waistcoats; And from each one a section was shorn. Cloaks, jackets, skirts, aprons, and neckties-They hovered in groups o'er the bed, And with aspect of atter dejection, Their phantom hands clutched at the spread

All night round the bedside they circled, And when in the morning I rose, My eyes in their stupified vision, Could see but a mass of old clothes.
So when at the table my hostess
Asked what sort of a night I had spent, I told my strange dream to the househ And begged to know what it all meant.

For a time they looked at me quite puzzled, Their faces with wonder perplexed;
At length my host cried, "I have solved it!" And laughed till I almost got vexed, He laughed while we plied him with que

MURDERED.

I do think, Jerome, you might let me have a little more money.'

Victoria Hale was sitting at the breakfast table, a pout upon her cherry lips, an ominous wrinkle between her brows. She looked very pretty in her morning dress of fluted white lawn, white breakfast cap of Swiss muslin, and rose colored ribbons that were peculiarly becoming to the clear olive skin and large velvety black eyes.

Her husband slowly sipping his coffee at the other side of the table, was quite as handsome and distinguished looking in his way. Jerome Hale was the bookkeeper and cashier in a large down-town three months as yet. Already, however, the bloom and charm of wedded life had been dissipated in some degree. He had begun to discover that divinity was die, dryly.

'More money, Victoria!' he repeated with a scarcely perceptible knitting of the brows. 'Are you not getting unreasonable? Do I not keep you liberally supplied with all that I have to spare ?

But it is so mortifying to go shopping with Mrs. Hyde Scott and Mrs. Bonnington, and have to stand by while they are purchasing the sweetest things were in pain. 'Impossible!' at such bargains.

Well, well, use them if you like. I laresay we shall manage somehow.' 'And the croquet breakfast? Only thirty or forty people—just to pay off our social debts. It's so shabby to be behind in such things."
