Moore, Horton street, was the scene of a pretty wedding at noon, when their only daughter, Hazel Jean, was married to William Ellis Wallace of Toronto, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Wallace of this city. The ceremony, which took place at 1 o'clock, was performed by Rev. J. T. Cosby Mor-

Quantities of daisies, bridal wreath nd pink roses were used as decorations throughout the house, and were banked in the drawing-room with palms and ferns, making a pretty setting for the bride, who was given in marriage by her father. She wore a sleeveless gown of ivory cambodian satin crepe, with rich trimmings of rhinestones and pearls. Her veil of embroidered net was arranged with wreath of orange blossoms, and she carried a shower bouquet of Ophelia roses and lily of the valley. Miss Ina Shipp of Ridgetown, a cousin of the bride, acted as brides maid, and wore a pretty frock o

The Girl Who Yielded to the Ancient Cave Woman Instinct-Why Is a Man Suspected of Wrong When He Is Just Polite to His Stenographer? Shall a Sixteen-Year-Old Girl Marry a Boy She Isn't Sure Of?

Dear Miss Dix-At the romantic age of twenty-one I was engaged to marry the only woman I have ever loved, or ever will love, but two months fore the date of our wedding she eloped with a professional pugilist. He treats her brutally, but she persists in loving him, although his only assets are his powerful broad shoulders, his terrific strength, and almost gorilla-like features. Why is it that women are more attracted by physical strength than anything else? Why are they crazy over athletes, boxers and wrestlers in particular? Why is it that pretty, quiet girls almost always marry rowdies and roughnecks in preference to decent, intelligent men, to whom nature has given almost everything that is desir able except a strong physique? FORTY-TWO YEARS YOUNG.

> Probably a reversion to type, brother. We don't seem to have gotten very far away from our cave ancestors when a man went out and wooed his mate with a club, and dragged her back into his dugout by her lovely red hair. Most women still have a secret hankering for that type of courtship, and probably even the most advanced of her sex prefers a husband of whom she is a little afraid to one who is not only too much of a gentleman to strike her, but even to assert his authority as head

I get hundreds of letters from women who write that their husbands eat them, but that they love them still, so evidenly feminine admiration for brute strength is great enough to survive personal suffering. And there is the classic story of the woman of the tenements who weepingly declared that she believed that her husband had ceased to love her because he had not given her a black eye for a month.

But the glorification of physical strength is not confined to women. Men also put brawn above brains, or talent, or anything else, as is witnessed by the fact that men will travel hundreds of miles to witness two brutes pound each other into a pulp and pay exorbitant prices for the joy of beholding this gory spectacle. The greatest writer, the greatest statesman, the greatest artist who ever lived, did not make in a lifetime of toil as much as a prize fighter makes in a few minutes. A college football game will draw thousands of frenzied spectators, but not a handful of people will go to hear an intercollegiate debate.

The reason that gentle, refined girls are particularly attracted by brutal and rowdy men is because we are instinctively drawn toward our opposites. There is something alluring in the unknown type. It is nature trying to adjust the balance of humanity so that we will not have at one end of the scale those who are all animal, and at the other end those wh are all soul. But Nature thinks only of the good of the race, not of the happiness of the individual, and this difference which draws people gether before marriage separates them after marriage and such union DOROTHY DIX. nearly always end in misery for both parties.

Dear Miss Dix-Why is it when a married man pays a little friendly ttention to a woman where he is employed everyone starts gossiping an links he is in love with her, even the woman herself? Most married men are well anchored and wouldn't give their wives for all the flappers in kingdom come, but every married man who is decently olite to a woman in his office seems to be under suspicion.

MARRIED EMPLOYER.

I suppose, Mr. Man, it is another illustration of the old proverb, "Give a dog a bad name and hang him." There have been so many office Lotharios, and so many employers have eloped with their pretty stenographers, that the world has come to look with a suspicious eye upon even the most casual kindness that a man extends to his fellow workers of the they are young and good-looking.

For a man to be seen out lunching with a pretty little bob-haired ecretary, or to take her home in his car, could set the tongues of gossing ragging, though his interest might be as innocent and paternal as that o ny grandpa who ever fed a hungry youngster, or gave a lift to a tired one But nobody would believe it, because the movies and the lurid melodrama and the sex novels portray the tired businessman as a wolf in sheep, clothing, and every working girl as either an abnormally innocent lamb o s chief of the home-wrecking crew.

All of which, of course, is tommyrot. Less philandering goes on in a business office than anywhere else in the world. Working people are concerned with making money instead of making love. Flirtation is a parlor game, not an occupation that pulls down a

Furthermore, the men and women who work side by side are not apt to fall in love, because they see each other too clearly and too closely. They get all the disillusions that matrimony would bring without any of its com ensations. The only thing that the average employer ever notices about s women employees is their efficiency, and he is far more concerned abou heir spelling or their salesmanship than he is about their eyes. And the average woman employee does not see her boss as a figure of romance. S thinks him a grouch, and is sorry for his wife, instead of wanting to get

As for a woman's mistaking the nature of a man's attentions, that is the commonest thing in life. The ability to believe that every man who is polite to her cherishes a secret passion for her every man tono is pottle to her terrishes a section passion of her is God's greatest gift to woman. It salves the wounds life deals her ranity, You will always find that the less attractive a woman is the more convinced she is that she is a vamp that no man can resist. DOROTHY DIX. * * * *

Dear Miss Dix-Would you think it advisable for a sixteen-year-old gir who has been brought up in a lovely home, and with every advantage ahea of her, to marry a boy a few years older than she? The girl really love nim, and is assured of his affection, but she loves another person almost well, though not exactly in the same way. Do you think it probable that a boy who has given up drink and will girls because he loves this girl would return to them after they are married

My dear child, any girl of sixteen who has a good home and thinks of leaving it to get married should be locked up in some safe place until her temporary insanity passes. And any girl of sixteen who ever dreams of doing such a suicidal thing as getting married when she doesn't know which of two boys she likes the best should be put in a padded cell. She's violently crazy with homicidal tendencies

Why do you want to wreck your life at its very beginning? Why ar you in such a hurry to plunge yourself into misery? Why do you want to marry any man when you are not in love with him, for you certainly hav only a passing fancy for a boy if you doubt your own affection for him Think it all over for the next five or six years, and then you won't marr either one of them, but you will choose a man who won't have to be r formed and whom you will know that you love.

Mrs. Hummer the Hummingbird is one of those who is very very particular. She is a very dainty little person herself, and everything around her must be dainty. So she builds the daintiest of nests. Jenny Wren had told Peter the truth when she said that Mrs. Hummer's nest looked like nothing in the world so much as a knot, a lichen-covered knot, of the tree in which it was built. Every little bit of lichen was built. Every little bit of lichen was placed with the greatest care. It looked as if it had always grown there.
