Can Not, and Will Not.

"No man can come to Me except the Father which hath sent Me draw him."—John vi. 44
 "Ye will not come to Me that ye might have life." John v. 40.

SOME people puzzle themselves with the seeming difficulty of reconciling these utterances of the Saviour. An old writer has a parable which helps to solve the question.

"A king," says he, "was troubled because of a rebellion in one corner of his dominions. Assembling an army he met his foes and utterly routed them. Many were caught alive, were convicted of high treason, and doomed to death.

Ere yet the day of execution arrived, the king sent his only son, with an unheard-of message of clemency. Without the walls of the Prison the prince set up the royal standard. He ordered every gate of the jail to be thrown wide open. Then he caused the heralds to announce, in words that might be heard in every cell of the condemned, the proclamation of the king. It was a declaration of free forgiveness on the simple conditions that every rebel should come out from the prison, confess his crime, and ask pardon.

Some hastened to except the terms and were pardoned.

Others within the prison, however, would not thus humble themselves. Submit to ask his pardon! Never! There was nothing to hinder them. No material obstacle lay between them and the prince. The way was clear. The impossibility was in their own hearts. They could not, because they would not. They each died rather than yield to receive pardon from their king."
