

- The India-Canada Environment Facility of $72 million is a counter-part fund set up to support local initiatives in environmental management, with a focus on water and energy management problems related to poverty. There is very limited opportunity for the Canadian private sector in this project.
- The CII Environmental Management Project aims to assist the CII develop the capacity to provide advisory services on environmental audit and management issues to its membership. The Canadian Executing Agency will likely have to contract appropriate Canadian consulting services. A number of opportunities will arise for Canadian companies from this project in the areas of training, technology transfers and the adoption of eco-efficient measures in India.

In addition to CIDA's market presence, Canadian environmental companies can, in some cases qualify for ODA programs supported by other countries such as Japan International Cooperation Association (JICA), USAID and others. Usually this will involve joint venture participation with other foreign countries resident in the relevant country.
