Home they bore the team half dead from the football field in haste; each dismembered form in bed carefully the doctors placed; long and tirelessly they toiled, while the air was thick uncoiled, while the air was thick uncoiled, while the air was thick uncoiled, patching up the busted bones, sorting out the teeth and eyes from a pile of human scraps, grading thumbs by shape and size of the mangled football chaps; surgeons hurried here and there, nailing on loose hands and feet, stitching up torn heads of hair, making several wishbones meet; nurses hustled fro and to, carting hammers, awis and saws, lint and bandages and glue, rubber noses, ears and laws. When I saw these human wrecks, briny tears suffused my lamps: "Must they thus cash in their checks ere they've whipped last season's champs? Must they in the flower of youth thus ingloriously croak ere the season's done, forsooth?" thus I sorrowfully spoke. But the doctors still worked on with their faces set and tense, from the twilight till the dawn, mending up those football gents.

Another will say: "The people will not stand today for giving twelve millions for the street railway franchise." The place that will be taken in next Thursday's debate by those members whose cars are to the ground can be anticipated. There are members of the council who go into the debate with a determination that all the facts will be threshed out. What impression they will make upon those members who have their ears to the ground remains to be seen. It has to be admitted that those members who have their ears to the ground should not shy from this tip.

Some Suggestions.

Service Helps.

Answer the telephone promptly, thus saving the time of three—the caller, the operator, and the person called. In identifying yourself say "John Doe & Co." or "Mr. Doe of John Doe & Co." rather than "Hello!" or "Well?"

In sending a message speak distinctly and courteously—a number clearly given facilitates prompt connection. Give one figure at a time, e.g., "one-nine-two-four." Hold the lips close to the transmitter. When connection is established say "Mr. Doe wishes to speak to Mr. Roe." This method is both time-saving and courteous.

Refer to the latest telephone directory—numbers called from memory are frequently transposed. A wrong number delays the caller, annoys the person wrongly called and slows up the service!

Make specific complaints—"The service is bad" is too indefinite. Give complete details so that a correction of the difficulties met with can be made.

Have adequate equipment—unless there are lines and stations enough to handle incoming and outgoing messages promptly, you and your customers are delayed. "Line's Busy" frequently results in loss of business-your competitor benefits.
