

at least $100 on his arrival to enable him to prosecute his journey to the interior. Immediate application for information and advice should be made at the office of the Society, so that there may not be a moment's unnecessary delay; never considering the journey ended until the point in the country, selected as most suitable to his capacity and circumstances is reached. The condition of the emigrant who remains in the Atlantic cities, is very little if at all improved. He has not the same chance of employment; he is more exposed to the contagion of vicious habits; all the necessaries and comforts of life are fourfold higher than in the country; and he has not the same opportunity of providing respectably for his family. We need not add, that, for all persons, in all occupations, temperance, integrity, and the love of peace, are indispensable, and that Father Matthew's pledge is as good as the best letter of recommendation. It is at all events prima facie evidence in favour of a young emigrant."

Let doubtless every reader who will be willing to do us the favor of consulting it, be kindly advised that you will find a very useful work by this author, entitled What Every Young Person Ought to Know About the Law of God and the Law of Man, which is well calculated to fit young people for every emergency.
