THE PLAYGROUNDS AS EDUCATIONAL FACTOR

Placing the public playground under proper supervision is a task of the first rank with the public school. Through proper educators, the state commissioner of health, Dr. Samuel G. Dixon, urges Pennsylvania not to overlook the essential value of correct training in play in bringing up the youth of the state. The Value of Play was the topic for Dr. Dixon's "little talk on health and hygiene" last week at Harrisburg, Pa., and he particularly directed attention to the playground as the arena in which the qualities of leadership are primarily developed.

Dr. Dixon says: "Summer days are play days for men and women as well as children. Perhaps at this time of year it is well to consider what play really means to all of us. As a relaxation from the cares of business and as an educational factor of no small importance to the growing boy and girl, it should be encouraged and intelligently directed. No history of a nation would be complete without some record of its amusements and entertainments. In these is written all change of manners, morals and faith. We are spending millions of dollars yearly upon the education of our children, and as a nation are justly proud of what we have achieved in that work. But there is much to be taught in the proper direction of this natural instinct for play. It is quite as worthy of the serious consideration of our educators as all the other studies in the curriculum. It is not in school but in play that children first learn respect for leadership and the value of courage, honor and pluck. It is on the playground that the first lessons in democracy are taught."

In those games in which the individual contests for his school among his mates he acquires standards which are the best possible training for future citizenship. "Parents who turn their children out to play without interest or knowledge of what diversions they seek are neglecting their duty and missing an opportunity to turn a natural instinct to the greatest advantage. Through this channel it is possible to cultivate to a high degree those qualities of imagination and character which will prove of inestimable advantage to the growing boy and girl. Public playgrounds should serve as an important place in the education of our children as the public school."

YOU ABOUT THIS

"A Million Bids," a thrilling photo drama in five reels, produced by the Vitaphone Company, and which had a run of 350 consecutive performances at the Vitaphone Theatre, New York City, is the most widely known picture ever produced. It is a drama in every sense of the word, and can be seen at a wonderful cast of well-known Vitaphone stars, supported by Julia Swayne Gordon, Harry Morey, Charles Kent and Gladstone James. The production was staged by Ralph Ince, the Vitaphone's foremost director. In its entirety it comes to Imperial Theatre, Monday 20th.

Some Thrilling Experiences of Great Game Hunters

(London Answers.)
F. C. Selous, king of big-game hunters, has survived a hundred close brushes with death.

He spent one thrilling night with five lions prowling round his frail shelter of saplings. Three of the lions he shot, with the blast of their hot breath in his very face, in a crowded and glorious five minutes. But he has never had a narrower-escape than when a wounded elephant charged him near the Untali River.

In vain he spurred his horse; the poor beast was too worn out to gallop. Mr. Selous heard two blood-curdling screams over his head. "All is up!" he thought, and then the task of the elephant crashed with terrific force into his horse's rear, and he was dashed to the ground.

At the Point of Death
"Although stunned by the fall," he says, "I felt that I was unhurt; but the smell of the elephant was very strong, and no wonder, for the huge animal was kneeling on me!"

Fortunately, I was thrown under its body, had fallen in front of the fore-legs, I should never have lived to tell the tale. I writhed myself loose, wriggled out from underneath, and escaped into the bush, with no more damage than a bruised eye and a stiff neck."

A still more thrilling experience was that of Mr. Greenfield, in Somaliland, just a score of years ago, when he was charged by a wounded lion. Two barrels fired in his face failed to check the lion; and Mr. Greenfield says, "over my left hand, and pinning me down with a paw on my chest, began to chew at my arm. Then he made a grab at my stomach, and when I managed to turn over on my face I felt his claws go into my back."

Although Mr. Greenfield's arm was broken in two places he never felt the slightest pain. All that he felt, he tells us, was the lion's hot breath on his face, and the blood pouring from his arm on to his thigh. Fortunately, at this critical moment, a well-aimed shot from one of his men killed the monster.

When hunting in Somaliland, Captain George Campbell was similarly bowled over by a wounded and charging lion, and the next thing he knew was that the lion was lying across his legs pinning him down, his huge head resting on his hip. An instant later the captain's head boy, Kalindeli, rushed up, seated himself astride on the animal's back, and flung his arms tightly round his neck.

Luckily for both the lion was already dying, and while Kalindeli was imploring his master not to fire lest he should be hit, "his Majesty gasped, bowed his head and passed peacefully away."

Major F. G. Jackson, a celebrated Arctic explorer, still recalls, with a shudder, the time when he was charged by a bear in the mountains of Alaska. "With a fearful roar," he says, "the bear rushed on me, his huge legs sweeping wide; his warm breath was on my face, his cruel fangs glinted in the dim light."

In the Rifle Flash
"Half-blinded by the flash of the rifle in the darkness, I thrust the barrel with all my force down the animal's throat." He plunged his left hand into the bear's mouth up to the wrist the sharp teeth deeply bit into it; he reeled under the shock of the collision. Drawing back his rifle, he was about to make a second thrust when, to his amazement and delight, the bear turned sharply round, and made his way swiftly to the water, crashing his way through the ice and swimming to the safety of a distant shore.

GREAT STORY AND

"A Million Bids" is the most famous motion picture in the world. It is a five-reel Vitaphone classic adapted from the drama "Agnes" and produced with a cast of Vitaphone stars. Anita Stuart plays the leading role, and her work stamps her as one of the foremost photoplay artists of the universe. Her chief support consists of such eminent Vitaphone stars as Harry Morey, Julia Swayne Gordon, Charles Kent and Gladstone James. The production was staged under the personal direction of Ralph Ince. In every sense, it is a Vitaphone masterpiece and well deserves its unequalled run in the metropolitan. Complete in every detail, "A Million Bids" comes to Imperial Theatre next Monday.
