Another amazing incident was that reported by the captain of a Dutch steamer, the Van Noort, on his arrival at Singapore. The parties immediately concerned were three sisters of German nationality, who were passengers aboard the ship when it was leaving Java.

After having spent the evening on deck, chatting and reading, they were seen one night going to their cabin about ten o'clock. Next morning the attendant could get no answer to his knocks at the cabin door, and, on an entry being made, the room was found to be empty.

On the table was a note addressed to the captain, which briefly stated that he was to have their luggage, and on a desk were a bottle containing a few drops of chloroform. From this it was conjectured that the three sisters had each taken chloroform, and then climbed through the porthole into the sea.

As a final example may be mentioned the case of a vivacious young lady who disappeared from a steamer while crossing from Belfast to Fleetwood.

The circumstances in this instance were peculiar in the extreme.

At 11 p. m. the young lady was seen by the stewardess, whom she asked to bring her a cup of tea at seven next morning, as she wished to catch an early train to Manchester. At the hour named the stewardess took in the tea as desired, but was amazed to find the cabin empty.

It was surmised that the girl had climbed overboard while walking in her sleep or climbed through the porthole into the sea—two theories which had not much of a element of probability to recommend them.

That she had disappeared was beyond all doubt, but there was nothing whatever to show why or how she had vanished in the still darkness of the night.

The total number of bricks used in cost of these bricks was $5,888,770. The greater part of the supply came from the Hudson River yards and from the Hartman River in New Jersey.

LOST AT SEA

Amazing Mysteries and Wierd Disappearances on the Ocean

(London Answers)
If the ocean has its mysteries, so has the ship that rides it, and which furnishes the more baffling puzzles would be difficult to determine.

Ships leave ports and are never seen nor heard of again, and in some respects more inexplicable still—passengers board vessels and suddenly forever vanish from human ken.

The strange disappearance of Dr. Diesel, a famous inventor, is a case in point which must be fresh in everybody's mind.

One day in the early part of this month, it will be remembered, Dr. Diesel, left Antwerp on board one of the Great Eastern Railway Company's steamers for Harwich, whence he proposed journeying to London to keep an important business engagement. On board the steamer the doctor appeared to be in the best of health and spirits and at 10 p. m. retired to his cabin for the night.

Next morning he was nowhere to be found, and, as these pages go to press, the mystery of his disappearance remains still unsolved.

As not many months ago the steamship Baldor, on arrival in the Firth of Forth from Gothenburg, had a queer story to unfold through the mouth of the skipper.

It concerned the uncanny disappearance of a second-class lady passenger.
The last that was seen of her was late at night, when one of the stewards noticed her pacing the deck. The vessel was then in the North Sea.

Afterwards this passenger's berth was found to be unoccupied, and not only the lady, but her baggage, consisting of a bag, had vanished. Where and how no one knows.

Could anything be more baffling than the following? It occurred on board a steamer between Leith and Orkney.
Among the passengers were two sisters, who were travelling to attend the funeral of a third sister.

When off Bell Lighthouse one of the sisters retired to her bunk, the other, as the night was fine, preferring to remain a little longer on deck. That was the last that was seen of her.

Through the porthole
