HER INHERITANCE.

"If any relatives of the late James Handford, some time curate of Widston, be still living, they may hear of something to their advantage by applying to Messrs. Dodd & Son, solicitors, King Street."

Barbara Reed put down the paper with a jerk. "I wonder if that means me," she said, thoughtfully. "My grandfather's name was certainly James Handford, and I know he was a curate, but I did not know there was any money in the family."

"If you think it worth while go to Messrs. Dodd & Son and find out," suggested a sharp-featured, elderly lady, who was stitching at the table opposite.

'Of course I will! Why, there may be £5,000 waiting for me there."

"Or £5, more likely," supplemented the stitcher.

Barbara laughed.

"I'd rather think of the thousands, Mrs. Stewart; they would be very much more to my advantage."

"I know of something that would be more to your advantage than all the money you are ever likely to get from advertisements, if you had but the good sense to see it," returned that lady, significantly.

Barbara flushed as she left the room to get her cloak and bonnet and set out for home. She was the music mistress in Mrs. Stewart's school, and had been one of the most promising pupils in it before that; she was almost alone in the world, except for a distant aunt with whom she lived, and after school days ended it became necessary that she should do something toward keeping up the little household, she had been very glad when Mrs. Stewart's proposal to retain her for the younger girls' music lessons saved her from applying to strangers.

Still, notwithstanding her obligations, there were times when Barbara felt strongly disposed to protest against that lady's authority, which was pretty much as it had been in the days when she was "quite a child," as Barbara often phrased it to herself. "She never seems to remember that I am grown up and able to manage my own affairs. It does not follow that because I was her pupil once she has any right to interfere in the matter now."

She was marching down the road, her head well up, while she argued the matter out to her own satisfaction, when someone quietly fell into step behind her. The shadow vanished from her brow like morning mist as she looked up.

"What are you in such a hurry for? I could scarcely keep you in sight," inquired the newcomer.

It was the subject of Mrs. Stewart's admonition, her drawing-master—clever enough at his profession, but of his industry and general dependableness she had not the highest opinion. Not so Miss Barbara, who was fast developing a very warm sentiment for the good looking young artist.

"I am going home to deposit my music; after that I think of making a journey into the city, to King street."

"King street! That is an expedition."

"Isn't it! But I have some idea of coming into a fortune, and that is the place I am to apply to."

Mr. Lawrence's face showed such genuine interest in the news that Barbara speedily told him all she knew, perhaps with a little unconscious exaggeration by way of justifying her first announcement.

"You will be sure and let me know the result of your expedition?" he said earnestly, with a lingering clasp of her hand, as he left her at the corner of her own street. "I shall be anxious to hear, and no one deserves such a fortune better than yourself."

In King street she ran full against a plain, rather commonplace young man coming out of one of the warehouses. "Why, Miss Barbara, it's not often you find your way to this quarter," he said, as he held out his hand. It was a brown, ungloved hand, and bore evident traces of hard service. Barbara gave the tips of her fingers rather coolly, contrasting it with the well shaped, yellow gloved one that had pressed her's a little before.

"I came on some business, Mr. Grant," she said. "I believe there is a legacy waiting for me. It was advertised in the papers, and I am going to see the solicitors about it now."

John Grant laughed.

"Well, I hope you may get it, Miss Barbara. For myself, I've never had much faith in legacies since I wasted twenty-five shillings once in answering advertisements about one."

"That may have been a very different matter from this," returned Barbara stiffly. "I had better not detain you any longer, Mr. Grant."

"And that is the man Mrs. Stewart thinks is worth half a dozen of Alfred Lawrence," said Barbara to herself, as she walked into Messrs. Dodd & Son's office. "It seems to be a decided virtue in some people's eyes to have coarse hands and shabby coats."

Her face was several shadows longer when she came out again. Messrs Dodd & Son had not received her with by any means the respectful enthusiasm she had expected. There had been awkward questions about proofs and genealogies that she had not been prepared to answer; indeed, she half fancied that they took her for an impostor, they had been so reluctant to part with any information. She should hear from them in a few days, and in the meantime she must kindly fill in the answers to certain questions on a paper they had given her.

Mr. Lawrence sympathized with her over the delay almost as deeply as she did with herself when she told him the result of her visit the next day. Barbara was quite struck with the way he seemed to enter into all her feelings.

John Grant was the next person to whom she had to explain her non-success.

"Just what I expected, Miss Barbara, said he, cheerfully. "One is never sure of a chance of that kind till one actually has it. I wouldn't build upon it if I were in your place."

"You don't seem to have had a fortunate experience in that way," retorted Barbara, ungratefully. It is only deferred in this case, and I am in no hurry for a few days."

"Days!" echoed John. "A man in our office has waited years, and is likely to wait, so far as I can see."

Ten days later came the much-looked-for communication from Dodd & Son:

"We are in receipt of Miss Reed's paper, and would assure her the matter shall have our best attention," etc.

Barbara flung it into her desk with a disappointed face. It was tedious to be obliged to wait in suspense like this. She would scarcely know how to get through the time but for Mr. Lawrence's attention and warm interest in the upshot.

John Grant's indifference, not to say skepticism, on the subject, threw up his rival's superior qualities in full relief; and yet there were times when Barbara felt just a little puzzled that Mr. Lawrence went no further. With all his solicitude and looks that meant more than words he never absolutely committed himself to anything more binding than the merest friendship.

'I can't ask him," she said one day under her breath, as she walked slowly home after one of these "accidental" meetings. "But I do wish he would say straight out what he means or else stay away altogether. It makes me feel unsettled."

Poor Barbara felt more unsettled still before she reached home. It was a lovely summer evening, and fifty yards further on she was joined by another cavalier, John Grant this time. She shrank back at first, half afraid of some jesting remark about the legacy, but she soon discovered that he had quite forgotten the matter. There was something else on his mind, and he lost no time in saying very straight out what it was.

"I may not be able to offer you a fine house and luxuries," he said, "but I have saved plenty to begin in comfort, and I think we might be very happy together if we would only try. I have thought about it for the last two years, worked hard to be able to tell you so."

Barbara looked up at him with genuine tears in her eyes.

"I am sorry!" she said. "I never thought of such a thing—at least, not in earnest," as she remembered sundry remarks of Mrs. Stewart's. "Besides, there's lot of other better girls you might find."

"That is not the point," he interrupted; "it is you, not other girls, I want. Try and think of it, Barbara. I don't want to hurry you, but let me have a line as soon as you can; it means a good deal to me."

For another week or two things continued to go in much the same fashion. Mrs. Stewart wore a chronic air of disapproval. John Grant was invisible. Only Mr. Lawrence was to the fore with his sympathetic inquiries, but in some mysterious way Barbara began to find them irritating rather than flattering. She got tired of giving the same response, "Nothing yet," and of hearing the same polite remarks about his concern and admiration of her. They did not go deep enough.

At last on Saturday morning, as she was setting out for Mrs. Stewart's, she met the postman, who gave her a blue, official looking envelope. Barbara stood still on the step, holding her breath as she opened it.

Messrs. Dodd& Son's compliments to Miss Reed, and beg to inform her that Mrs. Elizabeth Drake has been proved the nearest of kin, and consequently heir at-law to the £400 left by the late Mr. James Handford."

Miss Reed folded up the letter and put it soberly into her jacket pocket. She had scarcely realized before how much she had been counting upon it. There was nothing left now but so put on a brave face and make the best of it.

As Barbara crossed the hall to the schoolroom that afternoon she encountered Mr. Lawrence. He was standing at the table buttoning his light gloves. She saw at the first glance that Mrs. Stewart had told him of her disappointment. She hesitated one instant, then went straight up to him.

"You see I am not come into a fortune after all," she said quietly.

"So it seems," he said coldly, not looking up from a refractory button. "But it was not so much of a fortune, anyway. I thought it was to be five or six times that amount."

"I wish I had never heard of it," spoke Barbara, looking at him in scornful surprise. "It has been nothing but an upset and annoyance from the first."

"Y-es, rather a pity—disappointing, and waste of time, too. Well, I'm going into the country for a few weeks, Miss Reed, so good afternoon if I don't chance to see you again."

"Good afternoon," returned Barbara, with a frigid bow, as she opened the schoolroom door.

A tiny note was dropped into the letter box that same evening addressed to Mr. John Grant.

"Dear John," it ran, "I'm not half good enough for you, but if you wish it—I'll try.

It was not perhaps a great achievement in the way of composition for a young lady who had been under Mrs. Stewart's guidance for so long, but it perfectly satisfied the person it was intended for, and much loftier epistles have often failed in this respect.

"Mrs. Stewart, that unfortunate legacy was something to my advantage after all," Mrs. John Grant said once some months later. "I don't know what Mrs. Elizabeth Drake did with it, but I do know I would not change with her. The missing it has brought me far more happiness than the getting it ever could."—New York World.

Miramichi Advance.

Beginning with the issue of November 6th, 1890, when the ADVANCE entered upon its Seventeenth Year of Publication!

The publisher made an important change in the terms on which the paper is furnished to Subscribers. These include

1st. Strict adherence to the system of cash in advance for all subscriptions.

2nd. The reduction of the price of the paper to

One Dollar a Year!

It is to be particularly understood that all outstanding subscription accounts due after November 6th, 1890, are to be settled on the old terms, viz., $2 per year, the advertised credit rate.

I have made the foregoing changes in the business of the ADVANCE for two reasons.

The first is because many patrons who have been given credit, have abused the privilege to such an extent as to make the business of publishing the paper a non-paying one, and it is necessary, in my own interest and that of those who do pay, that I should no longer continue to furnish the ADVANCE to those non-paying subscribers.

The second reason is, that I wish to meet the competition of the city weeklies, which are made up from the type of the dailies and, therefore, cost little for production in comparison with a local paper like the ADVANCE, the type of which must be set up especially for it.

Having now published the ADVANCE for nearly 19 years, and endeavored to make it a creditable representative of Miramichi and North Shore enterprise—a paper which may be taken into any household without fear that it has catered to sensationalism at the sacrifice of that cleanness of matter, which is too often neglected by the press of the day—I have reason to hope the foregoing announcement will meet with general approval and be the means of largely increasing the circulation and influence of the paper.
