How to Gool a Gellar.

A great mistake is sometimes made in ventilating cellars and milk houses. The Association will meet on next Monday night to further consider the matter, and it is expected that every member of the Association will attend.

The meeting passed a vote of thanks object of ventilation is to keep the cellars cool and dry; but this object often fails of being accomplished by a common mistake, and instead the cellar is made both warm and damp. A cool place should never be ventilated, unless the air admitted is cooler than the air within, or is at least as cool as that, or a very little warmer. The warmer the air, the more moisture it holds in suspen-Bay du Vin. sion. Necessarily, the cooler the air, the sion. Necessarily, the cooler the air, the more this moisture is condensed and percipitated. When a cool cellar is aired Miss Rosina Gray, all of Derby. on a warm day, the entering air being in motion appears cool, but as it fills the cellar, the cooler air with which it becomes mixed chills it, the moisture is condensed, and dew is deposited on the cold walls and may often be seen running down them in streams. Then the cellar is damp and soon becomes mouldy. To avoid this the windows should only be opened at night, and late—the last thing before retiring. There is no need to fear that the night air is unhealthful—it is as pure as the air of midday, and is really drier. The cool air enters the apartment during the night, and circulates through it. The windows should be closed before sunrise in the morning, and kept closed and shaded through the day. If the air of the cellar is damp, it and dew is deposited on the cold walls and and kept closed and shaded through the day. If the air of the cellar is damp, it may be thoroughly dried by placing in it a peck of fresh lime in an open box, and the National Builder adds, a peck of lime will absorb about seven pounds, or about three quarts, of water, and in this way a cellar or milk house may soon be dried, even in the hottest weather.—[So.
