all the sessions of the congress, he said, but time did not permit of anything like a full discussion of the matters under consideration. He was of the opinion that the views of the English delegates, on the proposed interpreferential tariff policy in particular, were by no means fully expressed. On the other hand the congress ascertained in detail, and at length, the ideas of the Canadian delegates. He did not make these statements for the sake of complaint, nor did he think that it was intended that such should case, but it was nevertheless a fact that the Englishmen did not get an opportunity to express themselves

Mr. Walton said that the British people would not endorse Mr. Chamberlain's proposed policy of interpreferential trade. The electorate was not prepared to sanction a policy by factures at the lowest possible figure. If a tariff be put on wheat, the consumer must bear the burden, and the consumer in England was not prethe way of taxation than he was at present. The income tax there on the masses ranged from 10 to 20 per cent. This was necessary to provide for the annual expenditure of public moneys. and the carrying of a debt of thirteen hundred and thirty-five million rounds sterling. In Canada, he said, the debt was only fifty millions, but against that were at least one hundred millions of public assets, in the way of minerals, forest, great agricultural tracts, and railways. In England there were, practically speaking, no public assets. These were facts that the British electorate would look into before

Over-Production, However, Consists of the Steam Variety-Big Factories Now Using the Bituminous Instead of Small Anthracite-Much Wood Around Bangor.

(Bangor Commercial.) Many people have been wondering why, if the reported over-production of coal at the mines was true, the price should go up. Local coal dealers explain it in the following manner:

"The over-production in coal which has been so much talked about does not mean any over-production in the egg, stove or ordinary sizes which are used for house coal. All of the overproduction is in three varieties, rice, barley and buckwheat." A dealer went on to explain thet these varieties are what is known as steam coal, the coal used by the big manufacturers in their plants. It is a very fine grade, as indicated by its to reliable reports from Varna, at the name, the rice being not much larger > size bigger than that and the buckwheat still a little larger. The reason for the over-production is that before the strike the big factories in Philadelphia and many other cities had always used this steam coal. When the strike was on, however, these plants were obliged to use soft coal, something which they had never done before.
