Fighting Today And Yesterday

Old Timers Never Worried About Going Out of Their Class to Land a Good Scrap.

By GRAVY. Mr. Gladstone's remark: "Your modern fighters are mighty finicky about trifling matters such as weight, but it wasn't in the good old days. No sir! Those were days of real fighters, who fought quite as much for the love of the game as for the filthy lucre. Such great men as Walcott, Lavigne and the like never worried about going out of their class to land a good scrap. Terry McGovern was another fighter who occasionally made sallies into the heavier ranks to find battles worthy of his mettle.
