re safest in thy p our child with

GALTYMORE. ipperary.

ttle village at ty Mountain merry spring-es cluster, an' ast all countin', veiled in blos dal o' the May! flyin', from the peether, iet village when l an' sore, holy silence, an' the heather, lm o' Gilead at ltymore! village with its witty, w the city, nor the sea! wonder, "Sure," little pity; around us an' s soarin' free? the city where are darkened, ked ocean bringan' o'er.' I hearkened, an their betters, Galtymore." er failure dies endeavor. human anguish to the skies, marts an' byne grace o' God sin an' sorrow er rise! spirit shudders of exiles, risin'. is their portion.

e world's comvillage at the ollard, in Donaable pain. Holremoves and see what aved.

kable tion HE

AL!

ixty days' t of a new will comrn the Cap ted, as an deposited f London, kind in the the money as or com-

00, LTD.,

BY AUNT BECKY

The Secret of the Silver Lake

By Henry Frith, Author of "Under Bayard's Banner,""For King and

CHAPTER VIII.-The BUSH FIRE A NARROW ESCAPE-WHERE FOR THE "PAH."

"What do you call that?" said the Scout again, as a sudden puff of hot air came into the small clearing in the forest

"What do you call it, Bond?" said several of the party in reply.

Well. I call it fire, and the sooner we can get out of this place the better for our skins. If we hemmed in we shall all be burnt."

'What is the matter, father?'' whispered Stephen, as he and Ernest took each an arm of Mr. Belton and "I am afraid it is a forest fire

You have read of them in America and Australia. If the flames adcance we may be in a fix!" "But, father, surely we can es-

No fire can possibly get through these trees," said Ernest. 'My dear boy, you do not-you ennot imagine what a bush-fire It devours great trees as quickly as straws, and its progress is fearfully rapid. I have never seen one, either but I can at least picture it—and

While this little conversation was going on, the settlers and helps who had accompanied them were preparing for a start in a north-westerly direction, so as to head the fire. which was apparently burning in the north-east. But no one could tell for certain. Mr. Belton was much alarmed about Amy, for he believed she had gone off with her captors to the north-east settlements.

"Come along," said the Scout: "we have no time to lose; this place is suffocating.

The wind began to blow steadily now, and the heat consequently became greater. The men hurried along the track-no longer after the natives; they were trying to get round the great fire, though, course, ignorant to what extent it was spreading, and whether it was increasing in front, or only at their

As Mr. Belton and the others glanced upwards through the trees they could at times perceive what they believed was smoke rolling along the track, which was greatly impeded by creepers and fallen trees or logs, all quite dry and cracklingfood for the fierce fire, like so many twigs in an ordinary bonfire. boys knew that there was danger around them, but did not think how great was the peril.

The smoke became thicker thicker. Over the tops of the trees it came in great black clouds, driven by the wind, which those in the

Does Your FOOD Digest Well?

When the food is imperfectly digested the full benefit is not derived from it by the body and the purpose of esting is defeated; no matter how good the food or how carefully adapted to the wants of the body it may be. T us the dyspeptic often becomes thin, weak and debilitated, energy is lacking, brightness, map and vim are second thin, weak and adbilitated, sore just and in their pives come duliness, lost appetite, depression and langour. It takes so great knowledge to know when one has takingstion, some if the following sympoms generally exist, viz.: constipation, our atomach, variable appetite, headache, heartburn, gas in the stomach, etc.

The great point is to cure it, to get back sounding health and vigor.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS

digestion and assimilation.

Mr. R. G. Harver, Amaliasburg, Ont., writes: "I have be n troubled with dyspopsia for several years and after using three bottles of Ru-dock Blood Bitters I was completely our si. I cannot praise B.B.B. enough for what it has done for me. I have not had a sign of dyspepsis since."

es of the bush could not feel. "If we can reach the road, well IS THE SCOUT?-THE START and good," said the Scout. "We can get away faster there, and pull in front of it. But unless we turn to the left we must meet it." "Let us turn to the left, then," said Mr. Belton. "If so, we shall lose our trail."

said his brother. "Better do that than all lose our lives," retorted Mr. Belton. "Scout, can't you turn?" 'Yes, I could, but we shall find a very rugged country, hilly bare; and-yes, it will be safer, the fire will die out there."

So it was determined that party should turn round till wind blew behind them, and then they would continue their flight. It was apparently impossible to seek for Amy in the proper direction. But poor Mr. Belton began to be afraid that his daughter was dead; burned with the natives in the terrible forest fire!

Our travellers hurried along, near ly blinded with smoke, and half-suffocated with heat. At length they reached a road, and found themselves comparatively safe.

They were in a terrible state heat, and so dirty that they could hardly recognize each other; but the fire would not reach them along the road when they got to the end of the belt of trees. They got so far, and picious." then sat down to wait until it was safe to continue their journey.

The coach-road had been through the bush, and was rather As the men were wiping their foreheads, and resting, stretching their limbs and congratulating each other on their escape, a shouting and whooping were heard, then a rushing sound, mingled with cries and the galloping of horses, the continued cracking of a whip! "Hallo, what's the matter?" said one of the men. Ernest and Stephen jumped up, and both ran to a mound near, from which the road could be seen beyond.

"It's a coach or something, rushing at a fearful rate!" shouted the "Look you, it will be down boys. among you in a minute."

Those in the road cleared out of it, and in a few moments a coach, with down in their direction. The men a few passengers only, came tearing hurried on as quickly as possible down the road. The driver was shouting and gesticulating; his horses seemed hardly able to stand on their feet as he tried to pull them up. The passengers were blackened and burned; the paint was in big blisters from heat; the horses were almost hairless and terribly frightened, well as severely scorched. The coach had been caught in the fire, and very nearly destroyed.

"It has been a terrible business," said the coachman. "I thought I could get clear, and made a dash for it, but the fire came down in front and nearly cut us off. We'll well if I push on, but the cattle can't stand. By-bye!"

"He's a brave fellow!" cried Mr. Belton, -"and seems a nice man." chorus, as they prepared their "He's the son of an English earl," tols and loosened their rifles the bush to his baronial balls—at an attack, for some natives still surprised to learn that this young nobleman should be driving a com-mon coach in New Zealand. But many more curious things have hap-pened in the Antipodes. They had plenty of time for reflection on this fact, for the day was waning, and ran a great risk; so he stopped and the leader of the expedition advised waved his hand. He was unarmed,

"We cannot possibly go through the bush to-night," said Mr. Manton. "Let us remain here. What do you say, Scout ?"

do you say, Scout?"

"We cannot possibly go through the bush for several days," replied Scout quietly. "The fire will smoulder and may break out again. We "Bond!" "Scout!" "The feilow must try another route. Let us has turned up again!" "Where has rest here for a while, as the white he been?" "Take care: he may be care the moon is up round yonder remarks made by the r hills, to reach the mountain near which the Maori 'pah' is situated."

hills, to reach the mountain near which the Maori 'pah' is situated."

As the Scout's experience was great, he was permitted to act as the suggested, and the party, thiving set a watch lay down in a safe position to try to rest. But when they arose, at two o'clock in the morning, to continue their journey,

St. George's Baking Powder

"They say it makes lighter, tastier, finer-grained Biscuits and Cakes than any other they ever

National Drug & Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited, Montreal

What could have become of him? No one had noticed his departure. He had crept away in a quiet, stealthy way; and some men hinted that perhaps after all he was a traitor, and would betray them into the hands of the Maoris.

Stephen heard this suggestion, and was very angry. He went to his father and to his uncle, begging them to "stand up for" the Scout, and not permit him to be suspected.

"I am quite certain he is true and loyal," said Stephen boldly. "Uncle Manton, won't you speak to your "Presently, my lad, presently, But if the Scout does not return soon, we shall be in a perilous position. The fires are still smouldering, and may break out again at any We do not know in which direction our path lies, and should he said. the bush ignite again, we shall in-fallibly be lost! I must confess I think Scout's movements, are sus-

"Oh, uncle, you cannot think him a traitor," exclaimed Ernest. "He protected us before, and I am certain he will not desert us here!"

"Well, a few hours will tell us the truth," said Mr. Manton. "If he is not here by sunrise we must make some arrangements for ourselves. We have not much provision, and I do ed around. not feel inclined to die in the bush." of the others.

Then they all began to blame-the that moment he would scarcely have had fair play. Still, when the day broke and the sun rose, and the light shone brightly through the trees, making even the shade hot, the boys also began to think that their friend the Scout was not quite so good as they had pictured him. It was very extraordinary. Why had he not told someone of his intention? Why had he sneaked off in the night, without telling Mr. Manton, or even the watchmen, or the lads themselves? The Scout had been absent fifteen hours. The party became very impatient and very angry.

At last Mr. Manton said, with frown on his face, to his brother-"We must return along the If this fellow ever comes back, I will scold him myself. But he will not venture near my station again. Let us have some dinner, boys." "Coo-ee! Coo-ee!" cried somebody or something, amongst the brushwood. "Hark!" said Stephen. "Perhaps it is the Scout!" "Coo-ee!" replied the men chorus, as they prepared their pisid one of the party. "He prefers their shoulders. They half expected cherished animosity towards the set-Stephen and Ernest were very much tlers, and might come suddenly upon them from the reservation.

Com-But a few minutes a man clad in Maori a halt until morning. They had to and there were no more natives vi-consult among themselves.

men still stood ready.

As soon as he came within hearing distance down the rugged pathway, ng-for he was out of breath. "Let me come in, and give me a drink of water. I'm more than

They quickly supplied his wants and after a deep draught he con-

"I hurried off in the early part of the night, as perhaps you know, so that I might reach the camp of my people, and find missy. But the was burning and smouldering, so I had to go up the gullies cross the hills round yonder. After a while I reached the encampment-

"And my daughter?" cried Mr. elton. "Did you find her? Is she cried Mr. well?

'I didn't find her,'' replied the Scout, "because the Maoris have gone on amid the hills to their 'pah' with missy, whom they evidently intend to retain with them."

"Do they?" muttered Stephen.

'Well, Scout ?"

Well, when I found they had quitted, I went some distance on the track, and discovered their line towards the 'pah.' Then I began to think it time to return, and would have been here by sunrise perhaps, had I not lost my way; the fire has altered everything, and all the old marks are burned away paths hidden, and so on. I dare say you fancied that I had deserted

"Some of us did," replied Mr. Belton candidly; but no one confessed to the fact of his private suspicions. The Scout looked round quietly on the men, and said nothing. Mr. Belton continued-

"What do you propose, Bond?"

"You must come on at once, and we will try to gain admittance to the 'pah.' If not, then we must attack it, and so release missy-there ain't another way."

"Perhaps the natives will give her up," suggested Mr. Manton.

The Scout shook his head. "No, ne said. "They have found the White Queen, who will, they believe, enrich their tribe, and perhaps re store their ancient fame. who understand Maoris know how superstitious they are. We must persuade them somehow. first thing to be done is to leave here and find the 'pah.'

"What is a 'pah?" " asked Ernest "Is it a town?"

"No, a fortified village," replied his father: "a place hedged or fenc-Don't you remember "No, neither do we!" cried some the storming of the Maori 'pan,' reading of your cousin Fred's battle few years ago?"

Scout, and if he had appeared at then we shall start once again. Here "Now, boys, dinmer is ready; and comes the Scout," said Mr. Belton

The whole party had dinner, and then prepared for the march. After a fatiguing journey the Scout led them round hills, and when he had gained an elevation, he said-"Yonder is the 'pah'-in the valley, see?" "Yes; and what is that shining there—like a plate?"

"That?" replied the Scout. Oh, that is the end of the Silver Lake, alongside which is the Mysterious Cavern. Come, let us go on."

The men and boys followed, wondering what would happen to then But nothing occurred till next day, when a very important step was taken, as will be told in the next chapter.

(To be continued.)

Killed Patrick.

Bishop Broderick tells a good story of Archbishop Patrick Ryan of Phil-

"Once every month Archbishop Ryan preaches in one of the Catholic churches of Philadelphia," said Bishop Broderick, "His sermons always attract large congregations, and the Philadelphia newspapers re port them rather fully. One of the papers has been in the custom of sending a particular young man to make a report of the Archbishop's sermon, and the young man had always written a report that was accurate and pleasing to the Archbishop. Some time ago this young man was sick, or off duty, and the city editor of his paper assigned another reporter to cover the sermon. He wrote a long story of the mon, but it was full of inaccuracies and attributed to Archbishop Ryan expressions that were nothing less than heretical. The Archbishop was still thinking of it the next day when he met the editor of the paper on the street. The Archbishop hailed him, and naturally he referred to the report of his sermon.

Frank E. Donovan

Office: Alliance Building

107 St. James St., Room 42.

J. LUNN & CO.

Machinists & Blacksmiths.

BELL TELEPHONE MAIN 1983

SCREWS, PRESSES REPAIRS OF ALL KINDS.

CHATHAM WORKS. 134 Chatham Street, - - MONTREAL

THE TRUE WITNESS

DEPARTMENT

is second to none in the City. We have the most ample and modern equipment for firstclass, artistic printing. We offer to those requiring such work, quick and correct service. We respectfully solicit the patronage of our readers.

The True Witness Print. & Pub. Co.

Time Proves All Things

One roof may look much the same as another when put on, but a few years' wear will show up the weak spots.
"Our Work Survives" the test of time.

GEO. W. REED & CO., Ltd. MONTREAL.

do me a favor if you would not send that man again to report my ser-mons.' The editor apologized and is what he's brought hoam two or promised to comply with the Archbishop's request, but added that the bere will fill thirty-to pint bottles, reporter was one of the best on his staff and a member of the Catholic Church, and he could not understand how he had come to misquote the Archbishop. Archbishop.

it," said Archbishop Ryan, as he moved on." EXPENSIVE ARITHMETIC.

This letter was sent a short time

"Sir; Will you in future give three nites back. If four gallons of how many pints and half bottles will nine gallons of bere fill? Well, we tried, and could make nothing of it at tall, and my boy cried laughed, and sed he didn't dare to "'What is his name?' inquired the go back in the morning without doing it. So I had to go and buy a "'Kilpatrick,' responded the edinine-gallon keg of bere, which could ill afford to do, and then be "Well, he came pretty near doing went and borrowed a lot of wine and brandy bottles. We filled them, and my boy put the number down for an answer. I don't know whether it is right or not, as we spilt some while doing it. "P.S.-Please let the next some be ago to a schoolteacher by an anxious in water, as I am not able to buy more bere."

For New and Old Subscribers.

Rates: City and Foreign $1.50. U. S., Newfoundland and Canada, $1.00.

FILL OUT THIS BLANK AND MAIL TO THE TRUE WITNESS, MONTREAL.

Please sena me "The True Witness" formonths from 190... for which I enclose $...... Name of Subscriber P. O. Address

If you are a new subscriber, write "new" here.....