and make their mark in the festivities.

The 1976 edition of the Bar None square dancers, dancing to the tunes of the fairly funky Ag Band thoroughly entranced the crowd. Surrounding the 45 foot flat deck lined with red and white checked material were some whooping and hollering Aggies on horseback.

As we moved along the streets of downtown Calgary in below zero weather, spirits were lifted (and drank) as the crowd came alive; - what can be expected when you get 40 Aggies together? When Agriculture can attain such national prominence, it's little wonder why Bar None is Western Canada's largest dance. It was proven again that the Aggies are still NUMBER

ONE!

P.S. We forgot; we were not the only faculty represented. Some of our local gears putting their knowledge to work, getting their hands on the right end of the shovel, followed up on the mean trail dropped by the horses. It was a dirty job but it had to be done.

resource material would be up.

I am all in favor of equal for the sexes, probably more than many women are. In fact I am unconvinced that most feminists are in favor of equality, and will remain so until women start showing up en masse for manual labor jobs. Extrapolating into the future we can see a world in which women hold all the top executive positions while men perform the manual jobs which keep society functioning. This is not equality by any stretch of the (male) imagination. If women as a group wish to wear pants they must be willing to pay the price.

Women's courses

The Ad Hoc Committee on Women's Studies invited comments on their demands for women's courses, so here I am. I think that women's courses are an excellent idea, but only if a comparable number of men's courses are offered. This is in the interest of sexual equality, as I have no interest in studying women in a classroom situation. An alternative to separate courses for (and about) women and men might be a co-ed people's course. This version has two distinct advantages over separate courses: a) it is not discriminatory; and b) less
