along, like B.B. King, Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf and Jimmi Reed and Jim Witherspoon. I was raised in Tennessee and that's the kind of music they play there, and I lived there until I was 12. So I was based in that sound. And so when I moved into New York, I added some Latin rhythms and when I moved to DC I added some funk. Basically, the music that we play is a combination of the experiences which I had, and it all started with the blues. So all the other things seem to be an outlet from the blues, like rock'n'roll and R & B. A lot of jazz stuff is one on blues progressions.

Excal: But when we hear blues, we automatically think about the eightbar and twelve-bar of blues. For some reason, though, your music seems to be in a different form. Why?

G.S.H.: Why I have a different number of bars, you know, because I live in a larger neighbourhood.

Excal: Do you feel that your work is continuing the tradition of people like Langston Hughes and Contee Cullen?

6.S.H.: In a certain part of my work I do. In my work that has the same form as they do. You see, I'm an artist, man. It's like, if you ask a painter who can only paint with red paint. He's not a painter, unless he paints houses. I'm saying like a painter uses all the colours. So as an artist, I feel free to use the blues, to use the be-bop, to use whatever form I need to get the message across. Sometimes it's poetry, sometimes it's rap, sometimes it's blues, sometimes it's jazz. But like depending on what message is from that particular song, that's the kind of atmosphere you try to set up. In "Winter in America," we try to make it sound like winter. I don't know how effective it is. But the chords and the way they're played is supposed to bring that feeling on. So, hey, when we do things like Langston Hughes, we try to sound like Langston Hughes.

Excal: Are you looking back or are you looking forward?

G.S.H.: I'm looking at whatever the hell I've got to do. (Aside: hey give me some of that.) I've done 16 albums with over a hundred tunes. I ain't been looking in the same direction for none of them. Some of them are space-age, some of them are stone-age. But depending on the idea is what makes you decide how you're going to play it. When we play "Johannesburg," it's based on a rhythm called the "gamboot" which is a South African work rhythm. Okay, I'm not going to look there for another tune unless I'm doing something about South African work rhythms. Depending on what you're talking about, this is what you reach for. And playing with people whose background makes them knowledgeable in them kinds of things. When you're trying to talk about that, they know what to play to establish that atmosphere.

Excal: In a recent issue of Black Scholar, there was an article about the Harlem Renaissance. It talked about the revival in the 1950s and '60s with Leroi Jones at the focal point. Do you agree with that?

G.S.H.: I missed that, I was too young for that.

Excal: But you are aware of the Harlem Renaissance?

6.S.H .: I'm aware of it happening. But it wasn't happening in Harlem. It was happening down in the Village. But it wasn't a renaissance of Harlem. Harlem didn't need no renaissance. They need one like a son of a bitch now. The Harlem that I knew in the '60s when I got there was the Apollo Theatre. Like Malcolm was there in the '60s, but I don't remember any big renaissance of poetry by people of Harlem, or renaissance of any form.
