everywhere in the text. Nothing less was to be expected from the Doctor of the University Church. It would be a mistake to expect from the Holy Father the solution of the more practical question of the hour. The rate of wages, the policy of trade unions, the morality of strikes and lockouts, the housing of the poor, the prevention of evictions, and the more equal distribution of the land—on these heads he could obviously have...

LITTLE TO SAY. He has not written a library of volumes, nor even a single book, but only a pamphlet. Yet, if I do not mistake, there will be found in the earnest and weighty sentences which announce, with such dignified eloquence, the results of his earnest and long-continued meditation, wonderfully clear principles which will serve as a guide to those whose right it is to enter into details. The right of the workman to live not as a beast but as a man, the holiness of family ties, the right of employers not to imperil the workman's salvation, are not very new ideas but they are very opportune and they show what direction Catholic action should take...

of temporal sovereignty for the Pope. The call demands the abolition of the Papacy. To abolish the Papacy is to abolish the spiritual. There have been short-sighted men who would not see this most patent fact, but Pope has been thus dull of vision. His respect for the abolitionists of the people, which in Europe has replaced the abolition of monarchies, is small, and he looks with the eye of contempt on that fever of dogmatic fanaticism which is kindling upon Italian soil of all classes and conditions in Mazzini's time, and even that gentleman the gift of nineteenth century immortality. The Carbonari Society is in the main the subject of his article, and some of his statements concerning the conference of the Mafia Society. The dignified and able policy of Gregory XVI. in defence of his Kingdom at a time when it was in order were less popular than liberty and riot is made very evident to the reader and the fact that he transmitted his realm intact to his successor is a testimony to his ability, and to the abhorrence of Mazzinism of Austria.

The character he gives Mazzini is sufficient to put a blush on the conspirator's brow but in Central Park. It will certainly stir the feelings of the people who believe in Mazzini. First, he is "one of the most consummate liars that the earth," and "his delirious continuous untruthfulness is proven on page after page of his own 'Life and Writings'." No dependence can be placed upon his word. "The Holy Father says very emphatically that no solution of the labor question will ever be found without the assistance of religion and of the Church. The Church teaches the necessity of labor, and the impossibility of banishing human suffering. The Church defines the respective duties of employers and employees; this part of the subject is treated in a series of clear parallels in pages 13 and 14. The Church presents the supernatural view of human life and the beauty of suffering in union with Jesus Christ. It is a man, and others, a preacher and proselyter of assassination as a political weapon. Religion teaches us that all men are brothers; why should class be set against class? We find here thoughts which will serve as beacon lights for many a shipwrecked soul, out plainly on the rights of the poor to say that every man has a right to food and shelter, a right to marry and bring up a family, and a right to combine. No one questioned the abstract truth of these principles; but whether it was wise to insist upon them is another thing. The Holy Father has spoken, and spoken with very great clearness and frankness. He says that no one should be allowed to remain in idleness, and that every man has a right to marry, and to every man who is able and ready to support his family in reasonable comfort, and who is not fit to be idle, it is the duty of the State to provide for him. He asserts, with all due and reasonable limitations, the right of association, and that the State has no power to bid or interfere with such association, and he insists that, under present circumstances, no better work can be done than to promote associations of Christian working people under the name of 'Mutual Aid Societies.' This great encyclical, which runs to some forty pages in the English translation, may be called a 'Magna Carta' for the poor man, and a proclamation of individualism. The Holy Father, with the instinct of the Catholic pastor, sees that the first duty of the State is to protect the life of the poor man, and for the children he is to see that his God before he belongs to any State.
