Locarno Pact

GERMAIN FRAISE.

For the first time since the war the German language was heard in the council of the International Chamber of Commerce in Paris when Franz von Mendelssohn hailed the Locarno Security Pact as a good omen for future peace.

In a warm welcome to the German, Walter Leaf, of England, president of the organization, said:

"The presence of Mr. von Mendelssohn and his colleagues is an eloquent symbol of the reality of that will to peace which we all recognize as the sole stable foundation for the renaissance of Europe."

The German spokesman replied that he and his fellow delegates, "as representatives of German industry, wish to witness by our presence here that we are willing to close the page in the book of war and help to write a new chapter of co-operation."

GERMAN STUBBORNNESS.

Berlin Krenzzeitung: We have every reason to regard with scepticism and suspicion the Treaty of Locarno. We see the very greatest objections to what has been decided. But the last word has not yet been said. A treaty which would not grant to Germany an equivalent for the heavy sacrifices made by her in a western pact will never be approved by the Nationalist Party.

THE NEW ERA IN EUROPE.

Berlin Vossische Zeitung: The spirit which presided over the elaboration of the Locarno Treaty will be still more important than its text. With the Treaty of Locarno comes the end of the era of politics which sought for security by means of guarantees and territorial occupation.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE PACT.

Rome Mondo: Despite many difficulties and intrigues, the delegates have succeeded in concluding one of the most important agreements since the Treaty of Versailles. Germany understands that it is only by adhering to the League of Nations that she will be able to enter once again on the basis of equality into the concert of Europe and recover her prestige lost at Versailles.

THE EVACUATION OF RHINELAND.

Berlin Vorwaerts: It is possible that the evacuation of Cologne may take place at the moment when the Reichstag is on the point of discussing the Locarno results. As far as the delay in the evacuation of the Mayence and Coblenz zones are concerned, the refusal of the Entente to make any promise on this matter does not exclude the possibility of concessions at some date not too far distant.

THE BREATH OF PEACE.

Rome Osservatore Romano (the Organ of the Holy See): More than all the conclusions of the Pact of Guarantee and the particular conventions of the Treaty, it is necessary to praise the spirit, the intentions and the new language which were manifest at Locarno and to hope that this breeze of peace will continue and will blow clear the European horizon of the last clouds which overshadow the Oriental sky.

A SCRAP OF PAPER

Moscow Pravda: The Treaty of Locarno would amount to no more than a scrap of paper, if German policy were oriented towards the west.

SOVIET SUSPICIONS

Moscow Rabotnicha Gazette: We cannot overlook that German diplomacy will find it very hard to reconcile her friendly attitude towards ourselves with the fact that, henceforward, her exterior policy will, to a very large extent, be directed by British diplomats and politicians.

Jockey on Wrong Horse

TOSSED ON TO IT IN A SPILL.

During a steeplechase at Enghien, near Paris, in jumping a brook in front of the stand two horses—Se Souvenir and Meissonier—came to grief, one immediately after the other. Meissonier's jockey, F. Herve, was thrown out of his saddle and fell on to the back of Se Souvenir, just as that horse was scrambling to his feet. Herve quickly recovered his balance, got his feet into the stirrups, and jumped the next fence in hot pursuit of the rest of the field before he noticed he was riding the wrong horse.

The jockey then pulled up and brought the other man's mount back to the paddock.

"Welcome Stranger" Is A Knockout On The Screen.

What is known in the vernacular of the show business as a "knockout" took place at the Nickel Theatre last night where "Welcome Stranger" was given its initial presentation to local audiences.

With as fine a cast as we have seen in a picture in a blue moon, a story that effervesces with clean-cut comedy, real honest-to-goodness characters that you meet in every-day life, and a plot that sustains interest throughout, "Welcome Stranger" is just what the title implies. It's certainly welcome in these days of drab sexy plays and forced humor. It's entertainment plus and leaves a good taste in the show palate after the final fadeout.

The chief character in "Welcome Stranger" is a witty and philanthropic Jew who, in attempting to "break in" to the business life of a narrow-minded New England town, encounters the "old shoulder" and a select bunch of "vassalage" for his pains.

Through the good offices of a "real fellow" in the town, and the real fellow's girl, Isadore Solomon promotes the ideas of an unappreciated inventor-genius, corrals the water-power of a falls and lights up the town with a modern electric light plant, and generally booms the prosperity in the community.

If there is a finer piece of character portrayal than that of "Isadore Solomon," by Dore Davidson, we have not seen it on the screen since "Potash and Perlmutter." Wherever Solomon is, there is genuine "human" interest.

Florence Vidor is charming as Mary Clark, the girl who colleagues with him in his projects. In fact, the whole cast is excellent.

Damascus and Its People.

By DAVID NEVILLE.

Damascus, where the French and the Druses are now in conflict, is known to the Arabs as Esh-Shams, the City of the West, for long before Rome was born it was a mighty capital and a melting-pot of trade at the farthest extremity of the then known world. Trade routes do not change, and to-day in its bazaars and streets you may see, haggling and bartering wares of Central Asia and the Far East, the very types that thronged there when King David's armies entered it in triumph.

Cutting right through the city is the "Street Called Straight," where St. Paul was healed of his blindness. The corrugated iron roofs are new, but the white, almost windowless walls are as they were in his day. And everywhere is running water. The River Barada, tumbling down through the steep ravines and gorges of the Lebanon, the home of the Druses, that overhangs the city, is split artificially into five channels so age-old that it is only by an effort that one realises that they are canals and not natural rivers. And through the heart of the city there flows to-day "Abana, river of Damascus," which Naaman the Syrian praised.

The silk looms that gave damask its name are whirling still, but the armours who forged the famed Damascus blades are no more. When Tamerlane and his Tartar hordes overwhelmed the city he carried off to his own capital at Samarkand every swordsmith.

In Damascus Moslem and Jew, Greek and Maronite, Frank and Turk, jostle one another in narrow alleys, where black walls guard from prying eyes palaces of Arabian Nights splendour. Here and there you may see a Druse, aloof and tolerant, for the rigid seeress of his own strange faith permits of an easy acceptance of the outward observance of others. But he is a sojourner only. His place is in the mountain fastnesses, where the white-turbaned "Akhal" or initiates conduct the mysterious rites of his faith.

Everywhere about the city lines the "Garden of God," an oasis of incredible fertility where apricots and mulberries, grapes and pomegranates, weigh down the trees.

It is no trifling prize, this city of a quarter of a million inhabitants. David, Alexander, Saladin, and Napoleon III. have all held it, and to-day, though electric tramway-cars clang through its streets and telephone wires stretch overhead, it is still the city that saw the Saracen walls built on Roman foundations or the Omayyad mosque reared on the ruins of the Church of St. John and the buried fragments of the Temple of the Sun.

Household Notes.

If a vase is cracked, pour in it some melted paraffin and allow to dry well before using.

Raw oysters can be served in scooped-out halves of grapefruit filled with chopped ice.

Crisp slices of bacon make a nice garnish for a dish of French toast. Serve with maple syrup.
