FALL AND WINTER IMPORTATIONS AT THE MAMMOTH CHEAP STORE!

Announcement Extraordinary! Unrivalled Success! Unequalled Display! Competition Defeated!

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS WORTH OF DRY GOODS TO SELECT FROM!

Heffernan Brothers have great pleasure in announcing to their patrons that, in view of the great advance which they knew must inevitably take place in the price of woollen goods they were careful to place their orders with the leading European and Canadian manufacturers fully three months in advance of any house west of Toronto, and by means of a large cash capital have been able to make special and most advantageous terms, and are now prepared to show a large and magnificent assortment of NEW DRY GOODS AT OLD PRICES.

CATALOGUE:

We here give a short catalogue of prices in a few of the leading departments, but for a full and correct idea of the immensity of the stock and the unparalleled low prices of goods we invite every one to call and inspect the stock. One visit to our Mammoth Establishment will convince even the most incredulous that Heffernan Brothers advertise facts only, and that the Britannia House is beyond doubt the cheapest store in Western Canada.

CHAPTER XX.

WAITING.

There were two ways by which one could go from Matthew's cottage to the south lodge—by ascending the Ardgowan side of the ravine, and crossing the park, or by taking a narrow bridge path which led in the opposite direction to the highway, and going along the latter till the lodge was reached. This last was the route which George proposed to take, as he would thereby avoid going on the Ardgowan property at all. It was more over a shorter way, and easier traversed through the snow.

Matthew accompanied him as far as the high road, and left him in the expectation that he would soon return, with some one carrying his luggage. George smiled and nodded, passed through the gate, and turned to the left along the left along the broad, level highway, in the centre of which a track had been made through the snow by passing vehicles.

The day had broken up well; the dense mass of broken clouds had drifted from the sky, and a light, sharp breeze was springing up, under the influence of which the snow was falling from the branches of the trees, and the fairy scene of the morning was gradually disappearing.

In less than half an hour the chimneys of the south lodge came into view, and in a few minutes more George was tapping gently at Mrs. Rendal's door. It was opened by the latter—a woman turned of fifty, whose pleasant face lighted up with a smile of glad animation at the sight of the youth.

"Oh, sir, is it you?" she cried. "Come away inbye, sir—come inbye."
"You seem to have been expecting me," Mrs. Rendal observed George, as he stepped into the kitchen. Then, seeing his boxes standing on the floor, he added, "Oh, of course you have, since my luggage has been sent down."

"The boxes were here afore breakfast time, sir," she answered, "and this letter with them."

The letter had been carefully deposited in a drawer, as if the notion that it was of value, and as Mrs. Rendal handed it to him she bestowed on him a kindly, a wistful, and inquiring look.

George tore open the envelope, and found a sum of money enclosed, but no letter and no writing of any kind.

"My salary up to the end of the quarter," he remarked. "Well, the laborer is worthy of his hire, and as I have earned this I do not object to take it."

He looked up, and his eyes met those of Mrs. Rendal gazing at him with the same wistful tenderness, as if anxious to speak, yet waiting for the chance to do so. There was an expression of intelligence in her face which George instantly interpreted. He laid his hand on her shoulder and eagerly whispered—

"You have seen Miss Gibson?"
"I did, sir, this morning."

"Was she here?" he quickly inquired.
"Na, sir. I was up by at the house, and she cast herself in my way."

"And told you all?" he eagerly asked.
"Ah, sir, Miss Lillias has nae secrets frae me. She kens she can trust me; she kens the love I hae for her, that I would die to serve her; and for many years I hae kened the thoughts and feelings o' her heart maist as weel she kened them herself."

"I am glad of this, Mrs. Rendal," returned George, pressing her hand.
"Then, knowing all, you know how sad and miserable she and I have been made?"

"Alack, yes. But I feared it frae the first, I saw hoo it was to be awen Miss Lillias and you, and I kened that the Captain wad set his face against it."

"You saw from the first how it was to be," repeated George with smiling wonder; "why, you must be very penetrating? When was it, now, that the idea occurred to you that Lillias and I might come to love each other?—How long after the day of my arrival?"

"Say rather hoo lang afore yer arrival," returned Mrs. Rendal, smiling in her turn.
"Before my arrival?" he echoed; "why do you lay claim to the Highland possession of second sight?"

"Oh, no, sir, not at all, and yet it was as I say. Ye manna ask farther on the matter, for I'm no at liberty to tell. But some day ye may come to ken, and then ye wuna wonder. As thing I may say—if I half-expected it afore ye cam, I was shure o' it ye day when ye cam by the coach; when I say ye and heard ye speak, and lookit after ye gann up the avenue, I hadna the least doot o' what wad come."

"This is very extraordinary," said George, "I cannot fathom it at all."
"Weel, weel, sir, dinna try at present. But oh, sir, Miss Lillias has been wae, wae, at the thoughts o' yer wanderin without a hame. No a wink o' sleep has she had this night, I am shure, and—"

"Her grief on my account was needless," broke in George, eagerly. "I got a home without difficulty, and a more comfortable one I could not have."

"Where is that, sir?"
"With Matthew Greigson and his wife," Mrs. Rendal started visibly, and bestowed on the youth a look of keen interest.

"Keep us a', sir: are ye acquaint wi' Matthew?" she asked.
"Only since yesterday afternoon," he replied. "I discovered his cottage by accident, entered into conversation with him and—and we grew fast friends at once."

Mrs. Rendal made no rejoinder, but she nodded with intelligent significance, then hastened to observe how happy it would make Lillias to know that he had found such comfortable quarters. Presently she put her hand in her bosom, and looking cautiously out of the window, which commanded the avenue, whispered through the snow.

"I have a bit letter for ye, sir,"
"From Lillias?" exclaimed George, springing towards her.
"Whist! For gude sake, speak laich, for ears may be within hearin' that we wadna wish, and then a' wad be lost!"
