'The Two Orphans."

At the Grand Opera House to-night the distinguished Kate Claxton, accompanied by Charles A. Stevenson and her own selected company, presents an elaborate revival of the famous "Two Orphans" So perfectly is the play constructed, and so admirably are its situations and climaxes worked up, that the spectator feels no sense of ennui, but is as much absorbed, moved and stirred to his very depths, as he would of ennui, but is as much absorbed, moved and stirred to his very depths, as he would be perusing one of Dumas' romances, in which one chapter only adds to the fever heat of anticipation engendered by the preceding one. Of the artiste, Kate Claxton, it is needless to say anything. The part is pre-eminently her own. Her name and that of the blind orphan are synonyms to all theater goers for the finest exhibition of emotional acting.

Dr. Munro Gibson.

The following appears in the Canada Presbyterian from the pen of William Wye Smith, Newmarket, concerning one related and well-known in the city:

There is a passage or two in the early life of Dr. Munro Gibson very suggestive and stimulating for young men and worth recounting. In 1857 or 1858 Rev. James Gibson came from Scotland with his family and settled as pastor of a newly-formed Presbyterian Church in Owen Sound, and taught for two years in a rambling log building originally built as a shelter for to first.
