It was with real regret that Shirley bade them farewell, for they were unusually pleasant girls, and had treated her with marked friendliness from the first, not having allowed the trying episode which had occurred at Ivyhurst to make the slightest difference in their manner toward her.

make the slightest difference in their make the slightest difference in their make the slightest difference in their manner toward her.

The week that followed proved to be a very trying one to our young heroine. Madame spent the greater portion of the time alone in her room, busied with a pile of papers and account books that would have appalled a lawyer, while she maintained a stern and gloomy reserve that made Shirley utterly miserable.

Every morning, directly after breakfast, she was driven to the city, but did not once ask Shirley to accompany her, and upon her return she would immediately shut herself out of sight again, only appearing at meal-time, when she was so absorbed in her own thoughts that she scarcely spoke.

Of course, time dragged very heavily to Shirley, and she began to think it might perhaps be as well for her to return to New York to obtain some other position there. It was getting rather late to secure a position in a school; still, if she went immediately, there might be an opening somewhere for her.

She was thinking this matter one evening, just at dusk, and feeling very lonely, when she was suddenly summoned to madame's room.

She hastened to obey the command.

ly, when she was suddenly summoned to madame's room.

She hastened to obey the command, and found the woman sitting by her writing table, the student iamp lighted, her pen and ink at hand ready for use, while documents, letters and other business papers were strewn about with a reckless disregard to order that was wholly foreign to her methodical nature.

Madame glanced up sharply at her companion, as she entered, and knew, by the pale, tired face, that she was suffering keenly from loneliness and homesickness, and her stern expression relaxed a trifle, her heart smiting her momentarily for the course which she had been pursuing since their return from lvy-hurst.

But she straightened herself again at once. "Well," she remarked, with a sniff, "you have been having a pretty time of it during the last week-eh?" Shirley regarded her with a look of surprise at this remark.

"If you mean that you have not required much of me-yes," she answered with a sigh; "but I should have been far happier had I been allowed to perform my regular duties."

"Humph!" you are always playing the onscientious role," retorten madame, largly. "But I didn't send for you to seuss moral philosophy," she added, th an impatient shrug of her shoulders. "I simply wanted to ask you what you think about going back to New York." Shirley flushed crimson at this unexpected response, and her secsitive heart was deeply wounded, for the only inference she could draw from it was that madame was tired of her or the way that ence she could draw from i madame was tired of her or with her, and so wished to

Are you dissatisfied with my ser-as a companion?" she questioned, vices as a companion?" she questioned, in a tremulous tone.

"Well, no; I can't say that." madame replied, turning away from the sad, appealing look in Shirley's eyes. "You have artised me well eulough—better, in fact, then anyone I have had before; but I'm going back to New York myself." "Ohi" cries Shirley, with a long breath of relief and a throb of joy at her heart, for if she could only get back to New York she thought she would be sure to learn something about Clifton from Abby Knapp, who was generally posted regarding the movements of the Vining family, whom she had served so long.

"The Norwoods are coming home," madame resumed, taking a letter from the table, and the young girl's heart bounded again within her; for, she reasoned, Clifton would be sure to return with them, and, she felt sure, everything would be then explained about the missing letters. "Mr. Norwood has been very ill," madame went on, "and his doctor tells him that home is the best place for fall of a stinging lash upon her tender flesh.

"Blanche was married," she said, while she regarded Shirley curiously, to see how she would receive the tidings, "the day before this letter was written, to her father's secretary, and they were to sail for home three days later."

"Married!" gasped Shirley, with white, stiffening lips, while she sank weakly into the nearest chair.

Madame's conscience smote has as a home

Madame's conscience smote her, as she realized how keenly she felt the blow she had dealt her.

"Well, as usual, I'm an old blunderer," she remarked, with a note of self-reproach in her tone. "I was rash to blurt it out like that; however, it proves, that the fellow isn't worth a single regret on your part, and it is my opinion that you are well rid of him."

This reasoning was but poor comfort to the stricken girl, who had so trustfully given all the wealth of her affections into her lover's keeping, and she sat dumb and wretched before the woman who had thus deprived her of the last straw of hope to which she had hitherto been clinging.

"The men are all alike," madame went

"The men are all alike," madame went

"The men are all alike," madame went on, with a very uncomfortable sensation, but feeling that she must say something—"selfish and false to the core, everyone of them. I know something about it, for I was served in the same way when I was a girl. I promised that I would tell you the story some day, and I might as well do it now."

She paused and glanced at the slight figure sitting opposite her, as if waiting for some assent to her proposition; but, receiving none, she took silence for consent and proceeded:

receiving none, she took silence for consent and proceeded:

"When I was twenty-five I was engaged to be married to a man whom I had loved all my life. The day of our wedding was set, my trousseau nearly completed, five hundred guests had been invited, and every detail of the ceremony and breakfast arranged. I was an only child, my parents were wealthy, I had costly gifts of every description flowed in upon me—much of the bric-a-brac about the house, which you admire so much, came to me in that way. That set of corals which I gave you was amouther jewels, both rare and costly, but which I have never worn, hardly looked which I have never worn, hardly looked at since.

"Three days before the long-looked-for morning word came to me that my lover had changed his mind, that he had met someone whom he loved better than he loved me, and therefore he wished to be released from his troth to me. It was a bitter blow to me—even more so than the one you have just received, because of the publicity attending it; and while it broke my heart, it also galled and humiliated my proud spirit beyond endurance. It changed my nature, made of me a sour, sharp, vindictive woman, and destroyed my faith in every human being. This is my story, Shirley Livingstone; this is the reason why I am a cross, crabbed old maid, and I am afraid that your experience is going to be something like with the state of the state of cross, crabbed old maid, and I am afraid that your experience is going to be something like mine; whether it will make a misanthrope of you and turn the sweetness of your nature to gall, as in my case, remains to be seen, though I am free to confess," she concluded, with a touch of grim humor, "that there was more of the latter element than of the former in my make-up."

Shirley had made no sign throughout madame's narrative; she had sat, with bowed head and averted face, like one stunned.

Stunned.
She had heard the sad details of her early disappointment, it is true; but she was so benumbed by her own suffering that she could not half comprehend them that she could not nail comprehend them then.

All that she could realize was that Clifton was married to Blanche Norwood, that he was false to his vows to her, to his manhood and every principle of honor.

Reliable as the evidence appeared, however, she could not believe it—could not make it seem possible; and the effort which she made to account for his treachery caused her head to spin like a top, her sight and hearing to grow dim, until it seemed as if the world was slipping from beneath her.

But when madame's voice ceased she made a mighty effort to arouse herself, and strove to express something of sympathy for her.

"It was very hard—very hard." she pathy for her.

"It was very hard—very hard," she murmured in a dull, almost apathetic way. Then, lifting her heavy eyes to the woman, she asked: "But will you please read me just what the letter says about Miss Norwood's marriage?"

CELERY COMPOUND

QUICKLY RESTORES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO OVER-WORKED AND WEAK

Wearied, tired and overworked women are quickly restored to health and robustness when they use Paine's Celery Compound. It is the one great and reliable medicine that meets the wants and necessities of our ailing and sickly mothers and wives. Now is the time for the nervous, desponds ent, sleepless, dyspeptic, neuralgic and rheumatic to use the world's great health-giver if they would be well and strong for the summer months. Mrs. Mossop, Mimico, Ont., says:

"I have much pleasure in giving my testimony in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. I was entirely broken tells him that home is the best place for him."

But her next words made Shirley's head swim and nearly deprived her of both sense and strength.

Madame Marton did not really mean to be cruel, but she had acquired the habit of being blunt and brusqe, and so flung her paralyzing news at the young girl with a roughness that was like the fall of a stinging lash upon her tender flesh.

WISHES HERSELF BACK IN SCOTLAND

Rough Journey for a Woman of 80 Years-Trekking With a Family to Denver.

Windsor, May 28.-What at first appeared to be a troop of gypsies with four covered wagons stood all morning at the Windsor ferry dock awaiting the necessary papers from the American consul for admittance to the United States. Conversation revealed the fact that they all belonged to the Stewart family, and with the exception of John Stewart and his family, had only recently come out from the Highlands of Scotland.

"We have driven from Ottawa, and are on our way to Denver, Col.," said John Stewart, the leader. "We left Ottawa six weeks ago and have drive of 2,000 miles ahead of us. It has cost us little for food so far, but I expect that the Americans will not so ready to give us a meal as the Canadians. There are five families of us, and about 20 persons all told."

The most interesting personage of the whole outfit is Mrs. Mary Mc-Millan. Although over 80 years of age she bravely faces the long drive and hopes to have a comfortable home in the far west.
"I'm tell't I can get a wee bittie o' lan' oot in Colorado for aboot $15," said the old lady, as she held the horses while her son George got out the customs papers. "We'll settle down there and maybe I'll end ma days there in peace. I left Scotland Februar', an' I'm thinkin' I wad be geyan weel pleased tae be back

Woodstock Stakes Won by San Nazarro at Woodbine.

Rain Prevented All National League Games Yesterday—Gossip of the Diamond.

TURF.

AT THE WOODBINE. Toronto, May 28 .- For the first time since the opening of the races at Wood bine, today the track was in good condition. The sun and wind had dried it up, and the larger crowd which gathered saw some excellent racing. The big event on the card was the Woodstock race, which brought out a field of only four. San Nazarro, the fine 3-year-old of Mr. Hayes, of Louisville, which won the Toronto cup last week, with H. McCarron's Glenwood second, secured the Woodstock stakes after a very keen struggle, in which Glenwood at the finish was but a length and a half behind. San Nazarro has made a fine record at the Woodbine, and his owner refused $1,000 for the colt last week. There were but small fields in most of the events today, and the favorites had, as a rule, somewhat the worst of it. Following is the summary:

The latest mail received from Australia contains particulars of the race for the New South Wales one mile swimming championship, in which the winner, G. Read, covered the distance in 24 minutes 46 4-5 seconds, breaking the world's record of 25 minutes 13 2-5 seconds, held by Jarvis, the English champion. The race took place in Farmer's Domain Baths, and the report that Read had improved since he was beaten by R. Cavill for the one mile championship of Australasia at tracted a large crowd. Cavill ruled the one mile championship of Australasia at-tracted a large crowd. Cavill ruled the favorite at long odds, and his reputation was so great that, in spite of Read's im-provement, there were few takers. Con-ditions were favorable for a great conditions were favorable for a great contest.

H. Baker and C. Healy started in addition to Read and Cavill. All four struck the water simultaneously, but Read at once went slightly to the front. Cavill kept in close proximity lap after lap, despite the fact that Read set a pace which looked as if it would break him up before the one mile was finished. When fourteen laps, about 630 yards, had been reeled off, only three yards separated the leading pair. Healy had left the water before 300 yards, and Baker was some distance behind. Read slowly drew away after this, and at 1,000 yards was 12 yards in front of Cavill, who was 30 yards in front of Baker. Eight or ten laps further on Read's advantage was increased to 25 yards, and swimming strongly to the finish, a trifle more than 29 laps, he won by 35 yards.

The announcement of the time was greeted with tremendous cheers. Cavill's time was 25 minutes 12 4-5 seconds, three-fifths of a second better than Jarvis's previous world's record. Both are young men. Cavill, who is one of a noted swimming family, is only 17 years old, while Read is about two years older.

STEAMER SANK

IN FIVE MINUTES

The Sixty Passengers on Board Escaped Norwegian Bark Lost and Only One of the Crew Saved.

Burlington, Iowa, May 28.-The Diamond Joe packet, from Dubuque, southbound, struck a rock eight miles north of here last evening and sank in five feet of water in half a minute. Sixty passengers were or board, but there were no fatalities. VESSEL SUNK IN COLLISION.

Boston, May 28.—The Norwegian bark Elsie (Capt. C. Morse), from Moss, in Christiana, April 4, for New York, in ballast, probably was sunk last Thursday night south of Cape Sable by collision with the Wilson Line steamer Ohio, which arrived here yesterday from Hull, England. steamer was proceeding at fog speed, with Capt. Hadaway on the bridge. Suddenly out of the fog appeared a bark sailing on the wind, with full topsails, courses and staysails set, and struck the steamer on the pow, and after stopping momentarily, drifted astern and disappeared in the fog. A lifeboat left the steamer to render assistance. A call for help was heard and a vessel's boat with a young sailor in it was picked up. He could give little information intelligently. No signs of wreckage were seen. The sailor said he was 16 years of age, and Powel Christian Paulsen by name. He told conflicting stories concerning the disaster. When the vessels came together he jumped into the rigging, while the rest of the crew of fourteen men were all on deck. The bark keeled over and began to fill. Paulsen men were all on deck. saw one of the boats drifting a short distance away, and he plunged into the water and clambered into it. He believed the bark went down within a few minutes afterwards.

The Robinia is an iron steamer of 1,314 tons net register. She was bound from Charleston for Baltimore in ballast to oad for Europe. She hails from North Shields, where she is owned by J. Robinson & Sons. She is apparently uninjured and the captain and crew remain aboard.

ANIMALS IMITATE THE HABITS OF MAN

A Horse That Had an Eye Open for Live Wires and Ground Circuits.

[New Orleans Times-Democrat.]

"The aptitude shown by animals of the lower order in acquiring human habits is marvelous," said a student who lives in the upper part of the city, "and the story that the old flea-bitten mule had learned to unlock the crib door with a snagged tooth, is not, in my judgment, altogether a legend. The chances are that such things have happened. I have known of instances where mules would pull gate pins with their teeth, or shove a latch up with their tengues in order to break into a cornfield. There are but few farmers who have not had occasion to observe the same thing But I have found that horses are more observant than mules. While horses are not as cunning, and not as skilled in the artifices of deception and double-dealing, I may say, they are naturally more sensitive in temperament, and no doubt reason with more delicacy and more accusacy. [New Orleans Times-Democrat.] and no doubt reason with more delicacy and more accuracy.
"I know of one horse, for instance, owned by one of the electricians of the city, that will not, under any circumstances, step on a steel railing or go near a swinging wire because one of hor earn that some malicious person was attempting to satisfy some grudge against me. The chief stationed two men at my place to watch the hydrant. They concealed themselves and along about midnight they heard a squeaking sound at the hydrant, and in a few minutes the water was spluttering out at a fearful rate. They made a rush for the place, thinking to capture the culprit, but when they got there they found my little bay mare, with her head stuck down in the flow from the hydrant. She was drinking in the water, and seemed to be having a good time generally. They reported the mattter to me, and I had no more trouble about my hydrant."

She was knocked down by the shock, but was not seriously hurt. Since that time she has been extremely careful about where she puts her feet, and keeps her gaze on the ground at all times.

"But I owned a little bay mare several years ago that caused me considerable trouble, and for more than a month I was very much worried by an unaccountable waste of water on my place. It was before I moved to New Orleans. The water rates of the town where I lived are fearful. I had a hydrant in the back yard. Every few nights the water would be turned on in some mysterious way, and the yard wound simply be appearant to the part morning. Eviling to defend and the yard wound simply be noticed the next morning. Failing to discover the cause of the trouble before the end of the month, when my water bill had doubled, I notified the police, believing that some malicious person was attempting to action, control of the police.
