"Why, certainly. I was swinging at the time and tumbled into a cistern full of water. He fished me out with a clothespole. I can just remember his saying that he would like to have me marry him some with the fragrance of flowers fresh laid on day."

flowers and pressed them to his lips again and again, then held them reverently in his strong right hand. "Ah, Mary," he murmured, "you little "Ah, Mary," he murmured, "you little knew when you passed by me so hastily that I was the youth who, many years ago, clasped you fondly to my heart and nearly smothered you with kisses; that I loved you with a devotion which time has not dulled nor distance suppressed. Then you returned my caresses, now you coldly pass me by. Yet I cannot blame you. I am puor and humble, you are rich and proud; but some day—ah! I had nearly forgotten my only friend and constant companion."

when Mr. Brown heard that his former gardener, Jack Smith, had fallen heir to a goodly fortune he at once invited him to call at his house.

• Jack hesitated a long while before accepting the invitation, on account of his modesty, but finally yielded to the instincts of his heart and embraced the opportunity to behold face to face and on equal terms the fair girl whom he had twice rescued from the jaws of death.

One summer evening as they sat side by side on the beach at Brighton Jack said:

"Do you remember, Mary, last Decoration day when you placed tome flowers on the grave of your brother in Greenwood cemetery?" Music hath charms the aching heart to fire With love, ambition and a high desire. Here lies the leader of some heavenly choir. Shouldering his instrument of torture—his only means of livelihood—he slowly sauntered out of the cemetery. He was not tired of lingering there, but the shadow of a stalwart policeman with a raised club fell across his pathway and he know it was high time to move. As he

"Only an organ-grinder, Mary. But that is one of the things of the past."
"But you couldn't help it, Jack. I suppose there are lots of one-armed soldiers who earn their living that way, dearest."
"Soldiers?" he inquired, gazing vacantly at his empty sleeve.
"Yes, soldiers; men who fought during the late war. You were a soldier, weren't you, Jack?"
"I? Oh, yes; of course. Why, certainly. Phew! the air is stifling here. Let's go up to the hotel and get some cream."

"Good gracious!" exclaimed Mary Brown, awakening from a doze in her charming little boudoir in a splendid man-sion on Brooklyn heights; "what strange noise is that?" Hastening to a window overlooking the street she gazed and listened. Again she heard the sound. It was borne on the "Poor fellow!" thought Mary, as she watched his armless sleeve flap in the breeze, "he doesn't care to be reminded of

It was borne on the balmy May breeze from around the corner; it caromed on the tree tops and caused a panic among the sparrows; it clashed against the window panes on the op-posite side of the street; it crawled along the pavement, climbed up the facade of her house and assaulted her ears with anything that might recall his former suf They are married now, and are as happy there comes the wretch!" she exclaimed as she caught sight of an organ-grinder turn-ing the crank of his music-murderer as he hobbled up the street, extorting pennies from those who appreciated the value of peace and harmony.

"If he pauses one instant beneath my window I will slay him," she muttered, her beautiful black eyes flashing vindic-tively. -"Yes. I shall break the engagement, she said, folding her arms and looking defiant; "it is really too much trouble to converse with him, he's as deaf as a post, and talks like he had a mouthful of mush. her beautiful black eyes flashing vindictively.

Nearer, clearer, deadlier than before arose the wail of the wheezy wind instrument, until it and its owner stopped directly under the window at which the dark-eyed damsel set. Casting an appealing glance at her he ceased grinding and raised his right hand.

For the moment forgetful of her vow she leaned torward and sternly said:

"Go away, you horrible thing! I don't want to hear your soul-harrowing music."

The organ-grinder lifted his hat, made a profound bow and then adjusted the slide of his music-mill for another tune.

"Some day, some day, some day!" Besides, the way he hawks and spits is disgusting ""Don't break the engagement for that; tell him to take Dr. Sage's Cafor that; tell him to take Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It will cure him completely," "Well, I'll tell him. I do hate to break it off, for in all other respects he's quite charming." Or course, it cured his

But she miscalculated her aim, for the ponderous tome only knocked down a couple of policemen in the areaway and smashed the flagstone in fragments.

In her frenzy she lost her balance and fell headforemost out of the window. Hastily hurling aside the cause of her anger, the organ grinder stretched forth his right hand and caught her on the fly. "Acrain" he cried, gazing at her sense." "Jacob, I hef a conundrum for you. Vy does dogs loaf music?" does dogs loaf music?"

Catarrh-A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary succes that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon treatment for catarrh. Out of 2000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of the patients presenting themselves The air was heavy with the scent of infiment, cologne and camphor, and the ruby rays of the setting sun streamed through the curtained windows of Mary Brown's boudoir, tingeing the frescoed walls with a strawberry ice-cream hue and imparting a hectic flush to her pallid cheek, as she reclined on her crazy-quilt covered couch.

"Where am I?" she moaned, opening her eyes for the first time since her involuntary aerial flight. cent of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other ad-vertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally be-lieved by the most scientific men that the lieved by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished, the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple talk."
"But I will," retorted the beauty, petu-lantly. "I'm better now. What has hap-"Oh, yes! I remember now. And what became of that horrid—no, I won't say that, for he saved my life. Where is the musician who caught me in his arms!" As to how the late George Lear becam acquainted with Mrs. Hobensack, his first wife, more than forty years ago, the following romantic story is told: He was "Where is it? let me see it?" she eagerly exclaimed, wiping away her tears.
"The nurse handed her a sheet of paper on which was written:

"John Smith presents his compliments to Miss Mary Brown, and hopes she will soon recover from the effects of her rapid descent upon the exponent of popular airs. He would also beg to inform her that the first time he held her in his arms was many years ago, when she was a child. At that time he had the pleasure of rescuing her from a watery grave. He trusts to meet her face to face when his circumstances improve, as he has something of import.

CHAPTER IV.

HEARTS ARE TRUMES.

"Never again will I attempt to soothed the savage breast with music," gayly exclaimed John Smith, as he lolled in an easy-chair in his uncle's richly furnished library.

John had a level head and stack to his resolution.

Instead of wandering in cemeteries and strolling along the streets he was now living in clover.

His only uncle had died and left him a sung fortune a few days after the fair form of Mary Brown had dropped into his arms like a bale of hay, and he was in high spirits.

He hadreceived a delightful letter from the young lady's father thanking him for saving her. life and offering a position in his store, which offer he politely declined.

When Mr. Brown heard that his former gardear Jack Smith had fallen heir to a graduate of the coin can telegraph and the coin can telegraph words so distinctly that any telegrapher can easily read the message. In this manner he telegraphed fifty words a minute. A Republican reporter wrote out a message on a Western Union blank and handed it to the detective. The two operators in charge at the Southern took down the words as fast as Norris produced them with the coin. The message was rapidly sounded and written down, and all three copies coincided exactly. Mr. Norris can stand up before a telephone, and in this novel manner telegraph a message which any telegrapher can read with great facility. But the most wonderful thing is to see him telegraph with his eyelids. The dots and dashes of the telegraphical height and the stand of the coin can telegraph words so distinctly that any telegrapher can easily read the message. In this manner he telegraphed fifty words a minute. A Republican reporter wrote out a message on a Western Union blank and handed it to the detective.
