Canada vs. United States. Mr. Rogers. In your last issue you copied an article by request of a San Francisco subscriber, in which Senator Morgan delivered himself of a great deal of rubbish concerning Canada's treatment of the United States, and of the fearful and wonderful things the latter nation could and should do by way of retaliation.

Everybody on this side of the line, who is at all well informed, knows that the statements of Senator Morgan are grossly and notoriously untrue. They are even worse than untrue, they are grotesquely absurd. "Canada," he says, "has always been a land neighbor." What a pity it is that he did not content himself to give a few particulars.

It is generally an easy matter to make vague and indistinct assertions, but not so easy to substantiate such assertions with definite proof.

Let us see what Canada has done to give the United States reason to complain. Did she terminate the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854? No! that was done by the United States government, against the wish of the Canadian government.

Moreover, although Canada has always been willing to renew the treaty, or a similar one, she has made many attempts to secure its renewal. The United States has refused to do so, and has refused to do so in the face of the fact that the United States government has power to coast waters, so that its mission was a total failure.

Nothing resulted from it. Many times since that date, delegates have gone on the same mission, but they have accomplished nothing, something which is a disgrace to the United States government, and that government has power to coast waters, so that its mission was a total failure.
