Mary Moffat.

IN our last issue we presented our readers with a portrait and brief biographical sketch of the late Dr. Moffat, the venerable missionary. Our readers are conversant with the main facts of I)r. Moffat's illustrious career: first, as a successful missionary, for over fifty years in South Africa, and for the last thirteen years of his life as a sort of bishop, confirming the faith and kindling the zeal of the churches. In the work from which we make this selection,* the story is fully and ably told, and it is one that surely cannot be read without genuine pleasure and profit. The particulars of the life of Mary Mossat are not, we imagine, so well known as those of the life or

Dr. Moffatt, and it may induce many to read for themselves

the complete record

furnished by her son,

I if we afford, in this brief notice, some glimpses into its rich stores of self-sacrifice. Many readers will be thankful to the biographer self." In one of her own letters, written many years afterwards, we find the best account that the book contains of the beginnings of missionary ambition in the youthful breast of Mary Smith, which was her maiden name. Writing from South Africa to her aged father she alludes to a missionary meeting she attended in Chester, the first of the kind

held in that part of the country. "It was,"
