

We are not, with some others, to imagine, that our mission as an order is nearly fulfilled. A great work yet remains to be done—a work which it is the purpose of Heaven to have accomplished, and one in which we are well fitted to labour. It remains for ourselves to say whether we shall largely share in the honours and reward of being greatly instrumental in its completion. If we fail in our duty and shrink from the toil and the battle, Providence will raise up others, who, by faithfulness to the trust reposed in them, will reap a golden harvest and enjoy the spoils of victory. Let us not prove either traitors or cowards, and then, by the blessing of God upon our judicious, combined, benevolent, courageous and persevering effort, the world, in due time, shall be reduced from the terrible evils of strong drink.

J. McMURRAY, G. W. P.
