

The two methods of operation most frequently performed are Kocker's resection, followed by an end to end anastamosis (gastro-gastrostomy) with or without a Murphy button. Or Czerney performs a gastro-enterostomy, and after resection closes the cut ends.

The other operations which are performed for diseases of the stomach, and they are many, I have not even attempted to touch upon, as I feel I could not do them even the limited justice which these have received and because I have already overtaxed your patience and imposed upon your good nature more than is my prerogative.
