understood that the smaller combination, when organized, will take steps to test the legality of the yearly contracts, on the ground that it discriminates against numerous small dealers, and, if continued, would eventually force them out of the business.—Philadelphia Record.

FLAT OPENING BOOKS.

TWO new patents have been taken out in the United States for book-bindings, whereby the leaves will be flat when the book is opened.

In one case the sections or signatures of the book are formed in the usual way by folding a number of sheets of paper across the middle, the several sheets being connected with each other at the crease by a binding thread, which also serves to fasten a cord of flexible material to the back of each section. The binding thread also forms one, two, or more loops at the back of each section, and through each loop passes a transversely extending band made of a width corresponding to the height of the loop.

When a series of sections are to be fastened together, the first section has its cord attached to the back by the binding thread, which latter is then run to the second section, so as to bind the several sheets therein in place, and also to force its cord in position on the back of the section, the several sections of the book being treated in a like manner, that is, one is attached to the other at the cord with the transverse bands extending through the several loops formed by the binding threads, the loops being in alignment one with the other so that the binding band extends transversely through the several loops of the several sections.

The ends of the transverse bands are fastened in the usual manner to the short leaves, and the several sections are covered up at the cord by the back, made of leather or other suitable material
