

INDEX OF FIRST LINES

567

	PAGE
Hark, my soul! it is the Lord . . .	441
Hark! 'tis the twanging horn o'er yonder bridge . . .	182
Hastings! I knew thee young, and of a mind . . .	416
Hast thou a friend? Thou hast indeed . . .	370
Hated and vengeance, my eternal portion . . .	289
Hayley, thy tenderness fraternal shown . . .	116
Head us, Emmanuel, here we are . . .	134
Hear, Lord, the song of praise and pray'r . . .	177
Hear what God the Lord hath spoken . . .	139
He came to him in the ecstasy of pray'r . . .	131
He lives who lives to God alone . . .	370
He who sits from day to day . . .	248
Hence my epistle—skim the deep—fly o'er . . .	287
Here, free from riot's hated noise . . .	121
Here Johnson lies—a sage, by all allow'd . . .	323
Here lies one, who never drew . . .	119
Here lies, whom bound did ne'er pursue . . .	352
Hierocratia nam'd—save only one . . .	347
Her pen drops eloquence as sweet . . .	126
Hen nimicitias quietes parit amula forma . . .	313
Hen! quam remotus vescor ab omnibus . . .	233
He etiam jacet . . .	233
His Master taken from his head . . .	433
Holy Lord God! I love thy truth . . .	429
Honour and happiness unite . . .	165
Hope, like the short-liv'd ray that gleams awhile . . .	282
How blest the youth whom Fate ordains . . .	276
How blest thy creature is, O God . . .	462
How happy are the new-born race . . .	433
How many between East and West . . .	135
How quick the change from joy to woe . . .	122
I am fond of the Swallow— I learn from her flight . . .	484
I am just two and two, I am warm, I am cold . . .	628
I am monarch of all I survey . . .	311
I could be well content, allow'd the use . . .	125
I have read the Review; it is learned and wise . . .	639
"I love the Lord," is still the strain . . .	313
I own I am shock'd at the purchase of slaves . . .	371
I place an offering at thy shrine . . .	321
I ransack'd, for a theme of song . . .	379
I shall not ask Jean Jacques Rousseau . . .	636
I should have deem'd it once an effort vain . . .	322
I sing of a journey to Clifton . . .	159
I sing the Sofa, I, who late ^{ly} sang . . .	323
I slept, when Venus enter'd; to my bed . . .	345
I suffer fruitless anguish day by day . . .	473
I thirst, but not as once I did . . .	473
I was a groveling creature once . . .	367
I was of late a barren plant . . .	422
I will praise thee ev'ry day . . .	422
I wish thy lot, now bad, still worse, my friend . . .	577
Icta fenestra Euri flatu stridebat, avarus . . .	422
If Gideon's fleece, which drench'd with dew he found . . .	624
If I write not to you . . .	629
If John marries Mary, and Mary alone . . .	339
If reading verse be your delight . . .	635
In Copeman's ear this truth let Echo tell . . .	635
In Cnidus born, the consort I became . . .	513
In language warm as could be breath'd or penn'd . . .	412
In painted plumes superbly drest . . .	412
In Scotland's realm, where trees are few . . .	412
In these sad hours, a prey to ceaseless pain . . .	412