292 The IDLER. N° 52. have been awhile accustomed to victory, can no longer be refisted.

NOTHING is more fatal to happiness or virtue, than that confidence which flatters us, with an opinion of our own ftrength, and by affuring us of the power of retreat precipitates us into hazard. Some may fafely venture further than others into the regions. of delight, lay themfelves more open to the golden fhafts of pleafure, and advance nearer to the refidence of the Sirens; but he that is, best armed with constancy and reason is yet vulnerable in one part or other, and to every man there is a point fixed, beyond which if he passes he will not easily return. It is cer-, tainly most wife, as it is most fafe, to ftop before he touches the utmost limit. fince every step of advance will more and more entice him to go forward, till he shall at last enter the receffes of voluptuoufnefs, and floth and defpondency close the paffage behind him.

To deny early and inflexibly is the only art of checking the importunity of defire, and of preferving quiet and innocence. Innocent gratifications
