The last batch of arrests was really rather outrageous. A band of 13 suffragettes started from Caxton Hall to take a petition to Westminster. They did not go in procession, but attempted to walk the sidewalks like ordinary pedestrians. A crowd who had been expecting some such movement followed and the police gobbled up the women before they had gone a hundred yards, and they were by no means gentle about it. These women had committed no offence, but the magistrate before whom they were taken ordered them to furnish recognizances to keep the peace or go to jail for six weeks. They all went to prison.
