Her hand was on her sister's arm, she looked in her face.

"Yet he loved me, Father Juan, I know it; we women—can read a man's heart as never can a priest in confessional."

Heaven knows, "tis to us women alone that men's hearts are laid bare."

"Methinks, child, he set a less value upon them than that which is mine," rejoined the man.

"The heritage of the von Rohms is broad, then there is old Karl's treasure that has ever drawn riches savouring rather of fable than of fact, but in which the Count most surely believes."

"Then he believes an idle tale," interposed the lady with a curl of her lip, "methought our cousin had a better wit."

"Elsa was a poor joke, a selfish love, a love that must have run dry and failed. And thou, Elsa mine, shouldst some day give thy heart to one like to him who has wooed thy sister."

"Aye, and Leon has won her," said the Countess softly, and then with her face smile-wreathed in the half light: "But I have no wish for so long a wooing, neither does my love run in that same rocket-strewn as does my sister's."

"I was now more than half awake and turned on my side with a sigh. The two looked round and paused."

"Watch by him till I return," whispered the priest, slipping noiselessly from the room, "it is past sunset, and I must visit the wounded. Should he wake, give him the draught that stands prepared upon the table."

So the good man went to his sick and the door closing, my eyes slowly opened as the lady drew close to the bed.

"So thou art awake, Captain Lesly," said she. "Thou shouldst drink this draught that Father Johann has mixed."

"Had that evil-tasting liquor been a wizard's potion, gladly would I have drunk it at her hand."

"Would 'twere wine," said I, giving her the cup again, "that I might drink a health to Her Majesty, to the honours of Saxegedin, to Rohn and to thee."

"A string of healths, sir," she replied with a toss of her head, "and so many, I would fain have thee spare thyself the trouble of pledging me; nor but for Rohn, do I like my company."

"Then if I were to drink but to the Queen and to thee?" I asked, seeking to catch a glimpse of her features in the twilight.

"Then he believes an idle tale," interposed the lady with a curl of her lip, "methought our cousin had a better wit."

"Elsa was a poor joke, a selfish love, a love that must have run dry and failed. And thou, Elsa mine, shouldst some day give thy heart to one like to him who has wooed thy sister."

"Aye, and Leon has won her," said the Countess softly, and then with her face smile-wreathed in the half light: "But I have no wish for so long a wooing, neither does my love run in that same rocket-strewn as does my sister's."

"Watch by him till I return," whispered the priest, slipping noiselessly from the room, "it is past sunset, and I must visit the wounded. Should he wake, give him the draught that stands prepared upon the table."

So the good man went to his sick and the door closing, my eyes slowly opened as the lady drew close to the bed.

CHAPTER XV
A Bitter Understanding.
Later that day, Knecht brought me news that went far in lightening the weight upon my mind. The attack, he told me, was slackening and as each assault was repulsed, the foe appeared more apprehensive of the appearance of reinforcements for our garrison. The losses had fallen almost entirely upon the enemy, only two of our troopers had been killed and but five wounded since the morning. The spirits of the men, he further reported, were excellent, and as for the insurgent peasants, they had sided the soldiers but little in that second day.

SOUTACHE SUPREME ON SATIN-FA CED CLOTH.

Tailored costume of rosea green broadcloth; centre-seamed, good, demitrimmed skirt, finished with deep hem about bottom and at top with princess hand, pointed front panel effects in self-colored soutache embroidery. Half fitting coat with loose fronts, outlined with soutache embroidery, disclosing vest and inside collar of white corded silk embroidered in good threads; waist defunct with soutache embroidered coat cut in sharp points; modified Japanese sleeves, soutache embroidered, terminating below elbows; collar simulated with embroidery. White rough straw hat is the Babette model, trimmed with white roses and violets and green foliage.

battlement, and it was evidently their leader's wish to rest his men and hazard all upon the success of an attack upon the morrow.

Little by little all sound of musketry died, and as the shadows grew long in that chamber, I fell asleep to dream of my home in far-off Ayr and the green well breaking foam-flecked and ragged at the foot of Ailsa Craig.

It was dark when I opened my eyes and in the window stood the Countess Elsa and Father Johann. They were talking softly and as I lay 'twixt sleeping and waking, I was but half-conscious of what they said. Through drowsy half-closed eyes I watched them; little by little I was beginning to catch the drift of their whispers. Otto von Wegen was the subject of their speech.

I should still find cause for quarrel, sir. Wouldst thou have me light the candles?"

And whilst she bent above the silver sconces with the tinder box in her hands, I answered—

"Then the first glass I raise to my lips shall be to thee, and thee only. Have I thy permission, Mistress Elsa?"

Lightly she laughed as she came from the match caught the flick.

"Unto each day this evil as thou shouldst know, sir," she replied—though lips and eyes were merry, her cheeks were deep-set crimson. And placing the candlesticks upon the table beside the bed, she seated herself in a high-backed chair 'twixt them herself in the open window and fell to toying with the lace at her wrists.

Never in my life, in my Scots home, or in the length and breadth of the Empire, had I set eyes on the like of that maiden deep sunk in that velvet-cushioned chair, on her light brown hair and deep lashes, on her lips half wreathed in smile, yet inclined to pout, on her gown of ivory satin. And watching her my weakness and the castle's strat were forgotten.

Thrilled by her beauty, I could but thank fortune that had laid me on my bed to be waited on by this daughter of Rohn.

And seated at my bedside she told me more of the necklet and of the Spaniard who had sought it for her sister's sake.

"And this Leon de Portugal, my prisoner and my good friend to boot," said I smiling, "it seems, has a mighty influence with the Countess Elsa?"

Lightly, laughed Elsa von Rohn, and then the brown head bent, as she answered—

"He is a friend to our house; a friend tried and proven—aye, and more to my sister."

I had guessed as much and then and there plunged into the story of that unlikely adventure at the Kitzbach-smithy, while doubt and fear gave place to wonder on the lady's face.

"Leon scarce spoke of this," said she when the tale of my folly was done.

One niggard of words was reserved was this Spaniard, a generous gentleman who for himself sought no excuse in failure, were it never so bitter.

OF COURSE.

Guest—Waiter, this meat is like leather. Waiter—Yes, sir; it's a saddle of mutton sir.

"Just before Easter last year," said the grocer, as a disconsolate look swept over his face, "I baked and colored 20 dozen eggs and put them in the window for sale. They had hardly grown cold when along came an old tramp, and after looking at them for awhile he asked: 'Mister, did the hens lay 'em that way?'"

"No; they are colored, of course."

"What's the object?"

"Don't you know that they are Easter eggs?"

"No. Never saw any before. What's Easter?"

"I turned away from him in disgust," said the grocer. "But he wasn't going to give it up that way. Presently he asked: 'Do they eat those eggs?'"

"Yes."

"Well, I've a notion to try Easter and see how she goes, but I can't pay no 25 cents a dozen. How much for as many as I can get?"

FIRST SIGNS IN THE BACK

Says Most People Neglect Nature's Danger Signals Until too Late—Also Gives a Simple Recipe to Mix at Home.

Take care of backache. A great many cases of kidney complaint are reported about here, also bladder trouble and rheumatism.

An authority once stated that pain in the back, loins or region of the kidneys is such a dangerous remedy for kidney treatment should be administered and absolutely no strongly alcoholic patent medicines, which are harmful to the kidneys and bladder.

The following prescription, while simple, harmless and inexpensive, is known and recognized as a sovereign remedy for kidney complaint. The ingredients can be obtained at any good prescription pharmacy and anyone can mix them. Compound Karsan, one ounce; Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Shake well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime.

This preparation is said to restore the natural function of the kidneys, so they will sift and strain the poisonous waste matter, uric acid, etc., from the blood, purifying it and relieving rheumatism. Backache will be relieved, the urine will be neutralized and cleared and no longer a cause of irritation, thereby overcoming such symptoms as weak bladder, painful, frequent and other urinary difficulties.

This is worth trying and may prove just what many people here need.

MAKE THE SCHOOL BUILDINGS SAFE

Trustees Will Leave It to Committee to Get at the Cost of Necessary Changes.

The board of school trustees last evening held a special meeting at the buildings committee. The report of the common council's committee on the condition of the public schools was discussed and as a result the document was referred to a small committee to employ an architect and get an estimate of the cost of the proposed changes. This report, after having been considered by the buildings committee of the board, will be handed to the common council with a request to provide money to carry out the work.

A discussion also took place over the state of the sinking fund. This was precipitated by a published statement that the board has used $19,000 of the fund. Mr. Coll explained that while it is true the board has drawn out that amount of money they have on hand sufficient collateral in the shape of 4 per cent. bonds to more than cover it. These, he said, were not new debentures, but were authorized in regular form by the Liberal government in council some years ago for the purpose of wiping out an over expenditure on buildings then erected.

The market at the time of their issue, he said, was not favorable for the sale of the bonds, so the money was taken out of the sinking fund and these bonds were deposited with the bank as collateral. In doing as they had done, Mr. Coll said, the finance committee of the board had really saved the taxpayers money as they had thus been enabled to borrow money at a lower rate of interest.

TRYING IT ONCE

pepper nor salt, and I found out later that he had just had breakfast up the street. He sat there and made just two bites of an egg. Twelve bites and the six eggs were gone."

"Then he called for six more, and again and again, and then I gave him a pound of cheese and a pound of crackers and his 20 cents back to quit and pass on. I've seen some very enthusiastic Easterites in my time, but none to compare with that old tramp who had never heard of the day and wanted to try it once to see how the old thing worked. Thirty-five cents straight this year, sir, and no side is seen."

10. Members wishing to obtain luncheon tickets for non-resident visitors must apply for same in writing, giving name and address of the visitor, to the secretary, who shall notify the applicant if it will be possible to accede to the request. Such notifications can only be given one day before the meeting.

11. Tickets are only transferable between mother and daughter, or between sisters having a common residence. Violation of this rule will entail forfeiture of annual membership ticket.

12. The committee shall have power to invite guests, not exceeding ten in number, for each meeting.
