

An Education Useful to All.

The education offered in this institution is peculiar; suited alike to the educated, from a literary standpoint, and to those whose primary training has been neglected. Some get the idea that a Business College is simply to train Bookkeepers. If this were the case there would be little use for their existence. The work is practical and definite; useful in any line of work or in any profession.

FARMERS.

To those who desire to engage in Agricultural pursuits, it gives the necessary practical knowledge of business which enables them to meet the shrewd business man, the "oily-tongued agent," or the cunning land speculator, with a confidence in their own ability and knowledge of the principles and liabilities of contracts that secures them from fraud and imposition.

MECHANICS.

The Mechanic who has mastered such a course of study has every opportunity to rise in his calling by reason of his superior ability to transact business correctly and with despatch. Too often we find young men starting for themselves who are master workmen at their trade, but who have not the least idea as to how business should be done. Nine out of every ten, at the least, of this class fail. Others, far-seeing at the start, take into partnership a man having a knowledge of office work. This could be avoided by spending a term in College.

MERCHANTS.

To those engaged in mercantile pursuits it is invaluable. They gain a knowledge of the modes of conducting business properly in a few months that they would not acquire in years of actual work in the counting house. In the office they only learn what applies to one particular line of business, while at the College they get knowledge of the broad principles and usages of trade that are applicable to all classes of work.
