"Sir: you have behaved like an impetiginous scroyle! Like those inquinate, crass sciolists who, envious of my moral celsitude, carry their nugacity to the height of creating symposically the facund words, which my polymathic genius uses with uberty to abligate the tongues of the weetless! Sir, you have crassly parodied my own pet words, as though they were tangrams. I will not concervate reproaches—I would obduce a veil over the atramental ingratitude which has chamfered even my undiscerptible heart. I am silent on the foscillation which my coadjuvancy must have given you when I offered to become your fautor and adminicele. I will not speak of the lippitude, the ablepsy, you have shown in exacerbating me—one whose geinus you should have approached with mental discalcation. So I tell you, sir, syncophically, and without supervasaneous words, nothing will renderignoscible your conduct to me. I warn you that I would vellicate your nose, if I thought that any moral diathrosis could be thereby performed. If I thought that I should not impignorate my reputation by such a digtadiation. Go! tachygraphic scroyle, band with your crass, inquinate fautors—draw oblectations from the thought, if you can, of having synachronically lost the existimation of the greatest poet since Milton, and drawn upon your head this letter, whick will drive you to Walker, and send you to sleep over it.
