IMPORTANT NOTICE.

To Store Keepers, Traders, and the General Public.

PEREMPTORY SALE OF SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS. The ENORMOUS stocks of SUTHERLAND & CREAGHAN both at Chatham and Newcastle, thrown on the market regardless of COST or consequences. $75,000.00 worth of new and seasonable merchandise to be sacrificed—no reserve—all must go. Having purchased for spot cash the stock and real estate at Chatham and doubled the capacity of the premises, I have decided to continue the business at Chatham as well as at Newcastle on my own account. My long business experience of 18 years on the Miramichi, and the kindness I have always received, impel me to make greater efforts to please the public—who will find my stores at Chatham and Newcastle first-class warehouses in every respect. Ladies will have no cause to send outside for goods or samples. The very latest designs can always be found on my counters as soon as they leave the makers' hands. I have just returned from a business visit to the leading centres of trade in the United States and Canada having selected large lots of the latest novelties for spring and summer wear. As competition is a test, I respectfully invite leonard comparison and inspection of these merchandises—no trouble to show goods or give samples—Chatham and Newcastle.

LADY FLORRY'S GEMS.

A great change had resulted from my management, I must admit. The people about the place had found out that I was not to be trifled with, and it was quite cheering to find how they settled down to the work. But I did not relax my vigilance. I was out early every morning and about the place, fine weather or foul, and for months past I had encountered smiles where there were used to be scowls. One bright June morning I descended the cliff and reached the great chalk rock, where I undressed, stood for a few moments with the early sunbeams full upon me and reflected from the high cliff, as I gazed down into the dark depths of the cleft, before making my way down. Then I leaped right out, and dived right down to see how long I could stay before rising again, and repeating the performance, feeling for the moment what an excellent diver I was, and directly after how feeble my efforts were as compared with those of a seal.

"I ought to have gone right to the bottom," I said to myself, as I was dressing; "who knows but what the jewels may have been thrown in there? Not a bad hiding-place, I mused, "but no, not likely."
I walked back sharply, and, as of old, the rushing and splash in the well-house saluted me as I crossed the yard, thinking that if it had not been for my old friend's heavy loss I should have persuaded him to let me design new machinery for raising the water supply.

Bryson's words had so impressed me that it had grown into a habit to take my glass of cold water after my bath, and one was kept on a shelf on purpose for the purpose. One of the men thrusting in the winch-rod when a bucket was level, and filling the glass as a matter of course as soon as I was seen crossing the yard.
That morning, as I stood in the well-house, sipping the clear, cold fluid, and listening to the trickling and echoing splashing of the falling water, I gave quite a start, and involuntarily peered down into the horrible-looking black hole.

The next minute I had tossed off the remains of my draught, and hurried away, trembling lest my excitement should have been noted by the men; for, like an inspiration, the thought had come to me: "The jewels are hidden down there!"
Instead of turning into the garden, as I generally did, I hurried in and up to my room to find my dressing-bag, but with my cheeks burning and temples throbbing, calling myself fool, madman, telling myself that it was impossible, improbable to a degree; that there were a million more likely places for the jewels to have been hidden, and that to throw them down there was to cast them away forever.

But all those arguments were in vain against the hourly growing feeling that I had at last hit upon the spot where the stolen gems were hidden.
Why had I not thought of that place before? I don't know. Perhaps it was too simple, perhaps too impossible. Suffice it, I never had till now, and the idea had suddenly become a fever, which went on increasing for quite a week, when, unable to combat the feeling longer, I gave way.
"There must be something in it," I said to myself, "or I should not be haunted in this way. Superstition? Perhaps; but whether it is that or madness, or folly, I shall never rest till I have searched that well."
As soon as I had made up my mind to this, my first thought was to consult Lord Gurtleigh, but I cast that out at once. "He'll ride me as if I were a pack of mules," I said. "I can't make him feel as I do," and, although I would have gladly given anything for a confidant, I felt that I must act alone, and keep my actions hidden—no easy task—from everyone about the place.
It was like a fit of insanity, quite a monomania; but I was determined, and from that hour began to think out my plans.
The simplest thing would have been to empty the well; but that was impossible. No amount of drawing water had the slightest effect, for the diggers had tapped the huge reservoirs extending beneath the mighty chalk range running east and west of the vast spur upon which the castle stood dominating the sea. There could be no draining the well, and even had it been possible, I should not have felt disposed to propose such a thing, for I wanted to keep my actions secret in case it was all a fancy engendered by the sight of the place.

That night, with a feeling of certainty that I had as good as found the jewels which had been hidden there for the reasons I had already set forth, I made my way to the well-house after everyone had retired for the night.
I had provided myself with a lantern, matches, and a reel, upon which were a hundred yards of salmon line from Lord Gurtleigh's tackle, and, lastly, a heavy plunger, beneath which I hung a little grapel formed of hooks securely bound back to back.
The place looked very grim and repellent as I carefully closed the doors. All was silent and black, and when a drop of water dripped from the great cistern overhead, it fell with a splash far below, which I heard from the slimy sides of the well in a peculiar way that was almost startling. But I was too hot upon my project, and, carefully lighting my lantern in one corner, I tried to keep it covered over till I had attached the end of the line to the lantern-ring, and swung it down over the side into the well.

"Nobody is likely to be watching the place," I thought, as I lowered the light for 10 or 15 feet, and, then, as I looked over the rail, I began to search for what I expected to find, to wit, a string attached somewhere to the side—a string that I had settled in my own mind would be attached to the packet lowered down.
But I walked slowly round, examining carefully, and especially about the massive oaken cross-beams which supported the bucket wheel, and there was no result. I could see nothing but the stout rope, which rose up from the darkness, passed over the wheel by the cistern, and went down again into the black depths—two ropes, as it were, three feet apart, about the centre of the great shaft, nothing more.
I threw the lantern a little higher, then lowered it; and again more and more, but there was no string, and, bitterly disappointed, I let the light go down and down, stopping several times, and listening, in fear lest the clicking made by the salmon-vinch might draw attention to my task, and at last the echoing sound seemed so long that I twisted the line about the railing, and stole to the floor and listened.
All was still, and I went back to peer down at the lantern swinging softly to and fro fully 50 feet down. And now, after loosening the line, I let it run out with the lantern descending, past the buckets till I caught a faint gleam just beneath it and then I could just see part of a wheel standing out of the black water, the beams which held it being beneath the surface, the light burning clearly, and showing that there was no foul air.
As I rapidly wound the lantern up, I saw once more the two buckets about half way down. Then, as I went on winding, they seemed to be ascending but of course it was the lantern coming up, and directly after I had it in my hand, untied it and attached my grapel. This I held over the well, and the weight ran it out rapidly. I heard it strike the water, and then on and on it went to what seemed to be a tremendous depth, before it touched bottom.
Then I began to drag here and there, pulling it in all directions, expecting every moment to feel a check, and when at last I did my heart seemed to leap, but, as I lifted, it was only to find that a hook had caught against the bottom.
I kept this up for a couple of hours, passing from one side of the draw wheels to the other after hauling up, but my efforts were in vain. I hooked nothing, and, at last, in despair at my ill-success, I wound up, meaning to put the work off for another night, when all at once there was a sharp check, which nearly snatched the wheel out of my hand, and I knew that I had caught against one of the cross-beams that supported the lower wheel beneath the water. After a great deal of snatching and tugging the line was free, but at the expense of many yards left below, and my plummet and grapel left sticking in the beam.
"Enough for to-night," I said to myself, opening my lantern and blowing out the candle.
Then throwing back the doors, I stood listening, fancying I heard a step, but all was silent, and I crossed the yard, let myself in and went to bed, but not to sleep. For I lay tossing from side to side, more convinced than ever that the jewels lay at the bottom of the well.
Why? I don't know; I can only tell you what I thought, and though I had dragged so unsuccessfully, and felt that I was not likely to recover them in that very primitive way, feeling as I did that the beams would prevent me from thoroughly searching the bottom, I was more determined than ever, and by sunrise had made up my mind what to do.
