Mr. King, Principal of the Grammar School:
Dear Sir—It gives me boundless pleasure this afternoon to present you with a slight token of the respect and esteem in which you are held by the students and fellow-trachers of the Grammar school. We deeply regret your lors, but at the same time we are well aware that other duties call you and that much as we should desire it, we have not the power to detain you. While you have been with us, you have been a faithful friend, as well as instructor, and it behooves in as ladies and gentlemen to reflect no discrecit upon the man to whom we are so deeply indebted for the advantages of enlightenment, and whose learning, talent, steadiness and honor, have ever been a source of pleasure to his friends and coworkers, as well as to his pupils.

It does not become, nor is it for such minds as ours to fatter; yet the praises of sincerity have ever been permitted to the voice of friendship; and thus it is that we seek to commemorate the advantages we have received from the exertion of your good qualities. In after years we shall look back to our school days as the happiest period in your lives, end then "Hace Meminises juvabit." In conclusion, we tender you our sincere thanks for the interest you have taken in our welfare, and earnestly hope that the coming years will crown your life with the success you merit.

FROM JAPAN.

Rev. J.; Wadman and Rev. B. Chappell Discuss Missionary Work.

Both Clergymen Tell Interesting Stories of Their Labors Among the Japanese.

Rev. J. W. Wadman, who recently returned from Japan, delivered a very eresting address to a large congre ation in Centenary church on Sunday morning. In opening, he said there were several reasons why he should not attempt to preach a sermon, the chief one of which was that he had not been accustomed during the past nine years to speak in English. He had been requested to speak to the congregation with reconstruction. congregation with regard to the work in which he was engaged in Japan. When one came to think of the deep interest which Centenary church had always manifested in missionary work, it did indeed seem eminently proper that he should lay before the gathering some facts and figures relative to the Japan missions. Nine years ago he went to Japan and was appointed to work in the mission schools, which were regarded as very important in connection with the misons. The young men of Japan were anxious to acquire knowledge, and took to science and philosophy. They were given an education in these schools, and while in attendance there the teachers endeavored to win them for Christ. Most encouraging results followed. The schools at Tokio were filled in a most encouraging manner. While getting an English education these young men were taught the Bible. When they left the schools life with the success you merit.

young men of Japan were better adapted for such positions. The missionaries became superintendents of the churches, visiting them frequently and conferring with the pastors about all matters connected with the churches. Their main work was touring, going from one place to another, orening up work in the cities, towns and villages. The speaker had fifteen centres in the northern part of Japan, and his work consisted of opening up missions near them. The work began with lecture meetings, which as a rule were held in old theatres. The people attended in large numbers, desiring to hear the foreigners talk to them in the language of the country. These meetings often lasted five or six hours. The missionary would be the last speaker. This was done to induce the people to remain through-out the whole meeting. The Japanese were always ready with questions; in fact, they were not satisfied with the asking of questions at the close of the meeting, but visited the missionaries at their hotels as well. It was a pleasant experience for the missionaries when they knew that they were for the first time breaking the bread of life to those people and telling them the story of Jesus and His love. It was a satisfaction to know that It was a satisfaction to know that the work was pleasing to God. He told of a city where Buddhism was prosperous, in which he once held a meeting and showed views. This gave him an opportunity to speak to the people and distribute tracts and New Testaments among them. As a result of that meetings there was in that city a church with a native pastor, which had a membership of 75. The Sunday school had 150 members. When the truth really entered into the

Rev. B. Chappell, returned missionary from Japan, preached that evening in Centenary church. Before beginning his sermon he alluded to his former association with the congregation of old Centenary, the pleasant memories of those days, and the changes that have since occurred.

Alluding to his journey to Japan, and his meeting there with Rev. Mr. Wadman, he said he had sailed away across the broad Pacific not knowing what was before him; but even before he landed, while yet the ship was at anchor in the bay, Mr. Wadman came on board with friends, to whom the speaker was introduced and by the speaker was introduced in landing cargos. he landed, while yet the ship was at anchor in the bay, Mr. Wadman came on board with friends, to whom the speaker was introduced, and by them introduced to the work of the new field. It was the same work after all, in the service of the same Master. And he had thought since that when some day our feet shall touch the shore of another world, may we not hope and expect that the loved ones gone before will be waiting for us; and the other One whom we have not seen but of whom we have heard shall introduce us into that larger flife, which will, however, be the same service of the same Redeemer. For his text Rev. Mr. Chappell selected Malachi iii.: 1, Behold I shall send my messenger and he shall prepare the way before me. The text, he said, was fulfilled in the coming of John the Baptist and of coming of John the Baptist and of Christ, but though the old sacrifice, I priest and temple passed, these still in a certain sense remained. We are all asked to present our bodies a living sacrifice. The temple now is the heart of man, and the messenger is the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit prepares the way for Christ's coming army and distinguished pares the way for Christ's coming through repentance. Through regeneration hatred of sin, and the cry of the heart is that it may be made clean. There arises a hunger and thirst for righteousness. The Holy Spirit also shows the believer that as much like the Japanese as possible. The difficulty of acquiring the Japanese language was dwelt upon, as were also the customs of the people. They were a strange people, who built their houses opposite to the way we did, making the roof first. Their fondness for the beautiful was referred to, Mr. Wadman showing that in the smallest garden to be seen there was to be found a landscape in miniature. The Japanese, except in rare instances, had no beds nor chairs, no knives, forks nor spoons. It was no easy matter, Mr. Wadman said, to conform to their way of doing things. conform to their way of doing things. self surrender does not mean dropping They spoke, wrote and read back- into the hands of a tyrant, but a lov-wards. esting and was deeply impressive. Thomas Camock and a man named McArthur were working at the second story of a house on Britain street Saturday morning, when the staging beneath them gave way and they were thrown to the ground. McArthur es-caped with a few cuts on the face, caped with a few cuts on the face, but Camock was not so fortunate. The ambulance was summoned and both were taken to the hospital.
