The Sporting Girl.

Builders of the State.

When I was just a dancing girl, A debutante of sweet eighteen, My lovers gave me bonbons good And poems bound in gold and green.

And when I bet with them, they'd paid In dainty, lace trimmed mouchoirs fine, A cupil brooch, or long white gloves; All things distinctly feminine.

But now I am a sporting girl, Their gifts have taken a different cast; A tandem whip, a silver spur, A horseshoe stockpin was the last.

An English bridle pleased me much, Some sporting prints delight me yet; A case of leather dressing fine Cancelled a recent horse show bet.

"Grip" driving gloves and hunting crop Upon my birthday came. Don't ask, Who gave the next-the naughty man Has sent a sandwich-case and flask.

It's well to be a ball room belle With favors fine and flowers—that fade, But I prefer to ride to hounds— I'd rather be a sporting maid. M. N. B. in Rider and Driver.
