as he went down the stairs, closely followed by his inseparable companion, Tag.

"The dear boy! He is fairly pale," said Nan, to herself, as she turned back into her room. "It is strange how he loves that bishop—and what a different boy he is, too, since he came home. I don't see how the bishop can help loving him. Oh, I do hope nothing will happen to spoil his visit. He has looked forward to it so long."

The boy felt as if he were walking on air as he went rapidly through the crowded streets, seeing nothing about him, so completely were his thoughts occupied with the happiness before him. As he got farther up town the crowd lessened, and when he turned into the street on which the bishop lived, the passers-by were few.

At last he could see the house. In a few minutes he would reach it. Then his joyous anticipations suddenly vanished and he began to be troubled.

What if Brown wouldn't let him in, he thought, or—what if the bishop should refuse to see him or to listen to his story?

As these thoughts came to him his eager pace slackened, and for a moment he was tempted to turn back. Only for a moment, however. He knew that the bishop would not refuse to see him, and as for Brown, if Brown refused to admit him, he would go to the servants' door and ask for Mrs. Martin.

So thinking, he pushed open the iron gate and went slowly up the walk.

"Stay here, Tag. Lie down, sir!" he ordered, and the dog obediently dropped down on the steps, keeping his bright eyes fastened on his master as the boy rang the bell. Theo could almost hear his heart beat as he waited. Suddenly the door swung open and there was Brown gazing severely at him.

"Well—what do you want?" questioned the man, brusquely.

"I want—Don't you know me, Brown? I want to see—Mrs. Martin."

The boy's voice was thick and husky, and somehow he could not utter the bishop's name to Brown standing there with that cold frown on his face.

TWO NEW VERSES.

With the King's approval, two new verses have been tentatively substituted in the British National Anthem, "God Save the King." The verses were given initial rendition in St. Paul's Cathedral at the thanksgiving services. They are:—

"One realm of races four Blest more and ever more,
God save our land!
Home of the brave and free
Set in the silver sea,
True nurse of chivalry,
God save our land!

"Kinsfolk in love and birth,
From utmost ends of earth,
God save us all!
Bid strife and hatred cease,
Bid hope and joy increase,
Spread universal peace,
God save us all!"

The author's name has not been made public.

To his keen commercial ability the new L. and N.W. Railway chief, Mr. I. T. Williams, adds a rare sense of humour, and tells an amusing story of the tourist in Ireland who left the train at every station and went ahead to the luggage van to ask if his trunk was safe. After the sixth time the exasperated guard replied: "Begorra, I wish the Lord had made ye an elephant instead of an ass, an' then you'd always have your trunk in front of you."
