CHAPTER XXXIII.

Belle's Cruel Triumph.

"You wish to know just where you stand, I am the mistress of Laurel Glade; you cannot stay here a day. Frankie Whitney is my adopted son; you cannot have him. One day is sufficient time in which to pack your clothing, and to-morrow you and your maid will leave this house; but you cannot have my Frankie. There is no use for us to talk any more. Lawyer Mellen is growing angry now, and we must separate before we get to using hard words," said Mrs. Whitney.

"Madam, you are an inhuman monster! The law will—"

"What do you suppose I care for the law? If you wish to prove to the world that your sister and mine is a base woman and the child an illegitimate, I am willing. If for my wish to see how far the law will allow you to go, I can tell you. You must first prove Goldie Mellen to have been married to Major Grant. If I remember well, Major Grant married a Southern lady—a Miss Evangeline St. Clair."

Mrs. Whitney spoke in a tone of irony, and Mrs. Grant clasped her hands imploringly.

Lawyer Mellen sprang to his feet and angrily exclaimed:

"Belle, the spirit of Satan always did dwell within you! Goldie should go with me, and you may get all the comfort you can out of your ill-gotten wealth. You know as well as I do that Major Grant sent for me to draw up his will, and you know to that he would have given all his wealth to Goldie. And you know that you are thwarting the wishes of the noble-hearted major when you wrong his widow," continued the lawyer. "And you know that I am willing to submit to the proof of all these things, when his widow—"

Mrs. Grant rose to her feet and staggered to the door.

"I cannot listen to this abuse," she said, or, rather, groaned.

Grant Whitney had not spoken but once during this interview. Now he said, turning sharply to his wife:

"Belle, you are too hard! Let her stay with us. Old times are past and gone. Throw up all your bad feeling and let her stay."

"I thought that it was understood that you were not to meddle with this business," she retorted.

"It was; but, madam, this place was willed to me, and while I am master here I will have a little to say about it. She shall stay!"

"I can read your motives, sir," she sneered.

Without another word, Lawyer Mellen mercifully led Mrs. Grant from the room. In the parlor they found little Frankie, who had escaped the watchful eyes of Josephine, and strayed away in search of his mother.

She fell to weeping over him, as she caught him in her arms, Lawyer Mellen looked on pitifully. There was a baby in the humble home of the young lawyer now, and he thought how distressed his mother would be if anything should happen to take her baby boy from her. Finally he asked:

"How soon can you get ready to go home with me?"

"Let us go now. Jane can pack my clothing and follow me."

"It will be better for you to see that everything is right, sister. We can take the evening train."

"I shall have ample time to attend to everything between this time and six o'clock. Here, Christy, keep my money for me, replied Mrs. Grant. He took the wallet, and she remarked: "I have just five thousand dollars there. He gave it to me the day before he died. It was paid to him by one of his agents, and he gave it to me, saying: 'Take this and keep it; you may need it sometime.' I thought it strange at the time. Do you think he had a premonition of what was coming to him, Christy?"

"Perhaps so. It was fortunate for you that he gave you this. I think I can invest it for you where it will soon bring you in a handsome income."

"But I want you to keep it all, Christy. I shall be a great deal of expense to you, you know," she replied.

"Do not think of the expense, Goldie. Such as I have, you are welcome to it. But I warn you I live in a far different style from this."

He glanced about the parlor as he spoke.

for the sake of being near her boy; but even this questionable privilege was denied her. She was ordered to leave the place, and she knew well that she must obey.

So she folded away the little baby clothes wrought by her own hands, and, with many a tear, thought how long the time would be before she should see her child again.

She took all her own clothing, books, and pictures, and left the rest for Grant Whitney and his wife. Six o'clock found Lawyer Mellen and his sister, Mrs. Grant, and her maid Jane in the carriage, going to the station, from which they would enter the cars for New York City.

Mrs. Whitney did not come down to bid them good-by, and in answer to Mrs. Grant's request that Frankie might go in the carriage with them to the depot, she sent down a message that it was too late for him to go out.

So Mrs. Grant took leave of her child with many tears and sobs, which the little fellow echoed long and loud, and she left him crying for her to come back to him.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

A QUIET HOME.

The streets of the city were brilliantly lighted as Lawyer Mellen and his sister entered New York upon the evening of their leaving Laurel Glade.

Mrs. Grant turned her face from the glare of light. There was so much misery in her heart that the light seemed but a mockery. She felt, withal, a relief in being away from the dreadful presence of Mrs. Whitney, and many an impossible scheme flitted through her brain in regard to obtaining possession of her boy.

While she was dreaming of a quiet home, with little Frankie by her side, and she at work to support them, the car stopped, and her brother began to gather up the packages. Jane, with her arms already filled, arose, and was the first to step upon the sidewalk.

Lawyer Mellen assisted his sister to alight and the car went on.

"Follow me, sister. I cannot offer my arm, for you see I have them filled. My home is but a few rods distant," he said.

"We will follow wherever you lead," was the reply.

And in a moment more they paused before a plain brick house.

In answer to the bell, a tidy-looking Irish woman opened the door. The lawyer exclaimed:

"Where is Minnie? Is Mrs. Mellen in?"

"She's poorly, sir. The nurse went away to-day. I came to do the wash, an' found Mrs. Mellen high up."

For quick, positive results, the 16 ounces of cough syrup that you make with a 50-cent bottle of Pinex, cannot be equalled. It takes hold instantly and will usually stop the most obstinate deep-seated cough inside of 24 hours. Even croup and whooping cough yield to it quickly.

The user of Pinex mixes it with homemade sugar syrup. This gives you sixteen ounces—a family supply—of better cough remedy than you could buy ready mixed for $2.50. Easily prepared in 5 minutes—full directions in package.

Pinex soothes and heals the inflamed membranes with remarkable rapidity. It stimulates the appetite, is slightly laxative, and tastes good—children like it. Excellent for hoarseness, asthma, bronchitis, and other throat troubles, and has a wonderful record in cases of incipient lung trouble.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of Norway White Pine extract, rich in gum resin and other natural healing pine elements. Simply mix with sugar syrup or strained honey, in a 16-oz. bottle, and it is ready for use. Used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy.

with a fever. So I stayed till you came home."

"They entered the comfortable sitting room, and found Minnie, wrapped in blankets, lying upon the lounge. The baby was sleeping in his cradle."

"My little girl, what is the matter?" asked the husband, stooping to kiss her hot brow.

"I think I have taken cold. How glad I am to see you, dear! And Goldie!" she exclaimed. "Can it be possible?" she cried, springing up.

"Yes," said the husband, who had explained a part of Goldie's history to his wife. Then he added, in a whisper: "Please address Goldie as Mrs. Grant. The French maid knows nothing of her history, and she was called Evangeline, you know."

The entrance of Jade from the kitchen put an end to the conversation, for she announced that tea was ready.

The Evening

By H. V. C.

What kind of a girl do men like best? Some time ago, I suggested that my readers solve this much discussed problem from the stores of their experience. The result of that suggestion appears to-day. Here is a hint for the girl who does not think a man appreciates a sweet tempered girl.

"I have just noticed your inquiry for opinions concerning the kind of a woman a man likes. Below are my ideas on the subject drawn from my experience:

"I like one better than the rest, because I have never seen her when she was not in good temper. I have observed her in some temper-testing situations and have never seen her boil over, although I knew there was a storm raging beneath the surface."

READER:

Here is a word from a feminine cynic:

"Your column brings up a subject that I have thought about a great deal. I am not a man, but I believe I know what men like in women. I often wondered how some girls had so many beaux and went out so much; a visit to a girl friend's house when she was entertaining enlightened me. I have decided if any girl will allow a man to kiss and hug her and make questionable remarks to her, she can have all the gentlemen callers she wants * * *. Another thing. Men like a girl to meet them down town for dinner, and if the girl does not want wine or beer, she wears a snicker the rest of the evening. I would really like to meet a good natured business man who enjoys a girl's society because she is straight and not indecent."

I don't suppose I need tell you my opinion of this point of view or attempt to refute it. I'll leave that to the rest-of-my-gletter-friends. Here is one, who has a pleasanter faith in mankind.

Balfour's Going Deadly Blow to the Tories.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—The last week was filled with successive and amazing surprises. Premier Asquith began by announcing that the ministry intends next year to introduce the measure making a gigantic change in the suffrage system in England, reducing it to a manhood suffrage, and other reforms which must make an enormous addition to the voters and which will mark a further milestone in the complete democratizing of England.

But Arthur J. Balfour's resignation as leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons submerges that utility and every other question, and adds another point to the extraordinary well
