Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her.

Midgie Station, N. B .- One can hardly believe this as it is not natural, but it was my case. For ten months I suffered from suppression. I had tried different me

I started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and at the second bottle showed improvement. Now I am regular and never was so well in my life, thanks to Mrs. Pinkham's medicine.

Indian Head, Sask. - Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is indeed a boon to women who suffer from female ills. My health is better now than it has been in my five years of married life and I thank you for the good your advice and medicine have done me. I had spent hundreds of dollars on doctors without receiving any benefit.—MRS. FRANK COOPER, Box 448, Indian Head, Saskatchewan.

The most successful remedy in this country for the cure of all forms of female complaints is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

CHAPTER I.

(Continued.) 'I think, Lady Nesbitt, that Sir Richard is right. The bonnet is certainly a very becoming and elegant one, and if made a couple of gentleman, who has enriched her with you to perfection.'

a holiday for the rest of the afternoon, and I remained, needle in hand, changing and fitting the rest of the head-dresses, until Sir Richard tanped at the door to escort his wife down to dinner, and expressed surprise and disapproval at my occupation.

"Oh, It's all right, Dick, dearest!" I heard her explain, as she hurried him out of the room. "Miss Bernard quite enjoys the little change. We have been working together and making friends all day. You know she 's last horrid girl, with whom one could not attempt the slightest familiarity. Miss Bernard has been brought up by ny duties were pretty evenly divided etween the schoolroom and the boudoir. Almost every day I was summoned to bear my mistress company, either walking or driving; to read her to sleep when she was tired; to alter her dresses; give my opinion of her tea-gowns; to practice duets with her; even help her to receive her guests in the afternoon; and to act as duenna when the officer from the cavalry barracks in the neighboring town dropped in after dinner, as the lid nearly every night during Si Richard's absence in Scotland, whith er he had been called to attend the death-bed of an only sister, to whom he was attached.

It was at this crisis that my i atuation received its first effectua heck. I was reluctartly compelle admit that notwiti standing he retty, affectionate ways, her caress ing manner, her charming tempe. and undeniable good nature, my little mistress had in reality very little feel ing, and gave nothing like an adequ ate return to her devoted husband for the deep affection and devotion h lavished upon her. She did not seen to feel or realize his bereavement i the least, and scarcely ever allude to the subject, except to bewail the loss of her London season, and the local entertainments, the dances, the flower-shows, the races she would have to give up. She grumbled abou the trouble and the unbecomingness of her mourning, until I was quit weary of the subject; and the gay sweet laugh with which she greete Sir Richard on the day he returne from the funeral grated upon my ear and aroused in me a feeling almost o

"Surely, surely," I thought hotly several times during the trying weeks that followed, "however shallow of self-engressed nature may have mad her, she cannot be quite unimpres sionable! She must have some feeling of love for that courteous, kindly inches smaller in the rim would suit all his worldly goods, and whose lif is so devoted to hers; and, if she loves him ever so little, she must see and feel that his heart is mourning fo that companion of his youth an childhood who is not vet cold in he grave, and she must know that hurts him sorely to hear her grum bling incessantly about the heat and heaviness of crape in June, and the dullness and monotony of their en forced seclusion."

My lovely little mistress, however thing of all this which was so paten to me. She let her husband wande sadly and silently about his property all day, not making the slightest e fort. I could see, to relieve his mel ancholy and one night about ten days after his return, when I had timidly invited him after dinner to hear th children recite some religious poetry she had deliberately driven him out o to her satisfaction that my pupils had the drawing-room by opening the piano and bursting into a loud, flip-

Why didn' you tell me before? I'll-l'll tell him I'm sorry: poor Richard!"

> I often wished afterward that I had not been betraved into that act of imoulsive folly, for it raised an unseen parrier between my master and me, which, for months, it was evidently act in the power of either of us to renove. He avoided me in the most pointed manner after that evening did not come near the schoolroom for more than a week, and, in many other ways. let me see plainly that he re jected my sympathy and deeply re ented my officiousness in reproving the woman he loved. This knowledge grieved and irritated me so much that two or three times, I began a letter to Mother Josephine, telling her I was not happy at the Court, and begging ner to look out for another situation for me; but somehow, I do not know

Other preparations will not work in this at the nearest station that a rail was broken. Childlike, she knew the semaphore signals, had come to the track and had watched the long finger drop, letting the train into the block. "I'm pretty little, but I'll try," she said, when the station agent asked her if she would stop the train that was past him, and started out with her sister of fourteen who had just appeared. They ran down the track. stopped the train and saved a wreck.

Pretty much every primary school in the city ought, within the next week to hear of Eileen's "I'm pretty little, but I'll try." The alert attention which knew the semaphore sig nal, the quick wit which understood what a broken rail meant, the decision and initiative which alone sought the telephone, the courage with which she and her sister started up down upon them-these are the qualities which through life bring selfhelp, help for others, success and happiness.
